1. INTRODUCTION

Environmental samples are analyzed for a range of parameters including metals, nutrients, hydrocarbons, etc. Environmental Protection Act (EPA) and the Protection of Waters Act (PWA) and Technical Substances Act (TSA).

It is essential to follow sampling procedures carefully, especially if errors in chemical or microbiological tests occur. These can cause incorrect conclusions on the quality of water, sediments and soil. Environmental sampling procedures and methods are described in this manual to ensure the best of information and accuracy.

These methods for any environmental monitoring program should include, but are not limited to:

1. Identifying the objectives of the monitoring program
2. Identifying and describing sampling methods, physical or chemical methods, which are required by the objectives of the monitoring program
3. Identifying the appropriate sampling equipment
4. Mapping out the sampling area and the locations for samples and type of samples taken
5. Identifying a representative number of samples

6. Procedures involving site considerations and measurements
7. Specific site sampling procedures, including flagging of samples for analysis
8. Handling results accurately and completely
9. Reporting primary information

These lists are provided to address all issues that may arise in the field, which may be required from operations including subsurface sampling, microbiology or hydrogeology and the collection of potential or actual samples of the environment.

1.1 Using this guide

This guide provides general information regarding sampling procedures, storage, packaging and quality assurance procedures. It should be used for environmental monitoring programs, especially for compliance monitoring and audits. The target audience for this publication includes both field and laboratory staff.

- Laboratory
- Environmental monitoring
- Field staff
- Compliance monitoring programs

While specific rules of quality control with the sampling methods of water and soil, within the scope of this guide, such parties are required to have a level of competence including theory, laboratory safety and relevant laws relating with the collection of the samples.

This manual covers water sampling procedures and microbiology, metals and ions, and soil tests. It should be used for sampling for the purposes of the Environmental Protection Act (EPA) and the Protection of Waters Act (PWA) and Technical Substances Act (TSA), unless other provisions are approved by EPA officers.

This guide is also a reference publication for a range of sampling and analytical methods for the Environmental Protection Act.

Proper sampling and analysis must be conducted in order to ensure the quality of the data. Environmental sampling procedures that do not meet the following requirements:

Sampling must not be done during heavy rain or storms. If this is not possible, the water should be sampled and analyzed immediately after the rain has stopped. Further information regarding EPA's Environmental Protection Act (EPA) and the Protection of Waters Act (PWA) can be found at:
