Energy Planning In Developing Countries Peter Meier, 2019-04-24 Over the past decade almost all developing countries have established energy planning activities in response to the grave problems that have arisen as a result of the drastic increase in energy prices of the burden of energy related investment debt service and of the problems of deforestation Although the institutional and organizational responses are quite varied it is largely engineers and economists who have been called upon to provide the necessary analytical capability to support policy decisions in the energy area However as evidenced by the recent participants in the Energy Management Training Program EMTP many of the analytical techniques now regarded as appropriate go beyond the usual background of those who are now assigned to such tasks Indeed this monograph is based on the material presented in the first part of the course whose purpose is to bring the often diverse group to some common ground Some of the material such as Chapter 4 on the basics of energy pricing is intended primarily for engineers Other sections such as Chapter 2 on energy balances is primarily a vehicle for a discussion of the problems of units and differences in approach by different international bodies The intent then is to provide in a single work a primer on a large number of different analytical tools Models for Energy Policy Jean-Baptiste Lesourd, Jacques Percebois, François Valette, 1996 Energy policy is a key area in all of the world's economies this book integrates physical technical economic and social concerns Energy Abstracts for Policy Analysis, 1988 Artificial Intelligence-Based Forecasting and Analytic Techniques for Environment and Economics Management Wendong Yang, Shaolong Sun, Yiliao Song, Pei Du, Yan Hao, Jianzhou Wang, 2022-11-09 Analytic Techniques in Urban and Regional Planning John W.
