Introduction

The child I have chosen to observe is named Amy. She is a two-year-old who has fair skin, black hair, and dark brown eyes. Her birthday is May 16th. Amy is a toddler who lives with both her mother and father. The socioeconomic status of the family is as follows: her dad attended a two-year technical school where he received an Associate's Degree in Auto Mechanics. He is now employed by the United States Postal Service, as a lead auto technician, and his income is mid-ranged. His mom also attended a technical school and received a Medical Certificate as a Phlebotomist. For personal reasons, his mother chose to work in a different field after having completed the certificate program. She is now employed by a small family-owned business and holds a secretarial position.

In addition to her parents, Amy has an older brother who is named A.J. He is eight years old. The family lives in a two-bedroom apartment in the greater Dallas area. The children share a bedroom, which is decorated with both dolls and cars to accommodate both genders. They also have a television in their room that is they use for both watching and video gaming. I specifically chose this child because of her enormous sense of curiosity.

Physical Development

Amy can run, walk up stairs with help, and jump off of the floor with both feet. According to the textbook, this is normal large motor development for a two-year-old (Manis, 2017). During my observation, she used different coloring crayons, picked up
