

CHAPTER 7

Coal

Introduction

Coal is a combustible black or brownish-black sedimentary rock normally occurring in layers or veins referred to as coal beds or coal seams. It is composed primarily of elemental carbon along with variable quantities of other elements—chiefly hydrogen, with smaller quantities of sulfur, and even smaller quantities of oxygen and nitrogen.

Coal was formed from the energy that plants absorbed from the sun millions of years ago. These living plants converted solar energy to living plant materials through a process known as photosynthesis.
