Atlas Of The Moon:

The Atlas of the Near Side of the Moon Fredrick toe Laer,2026-01-01 The atlas of the near side of the Moon provides a wealth of named lunar formations that goes far beyond the named features currently identified by the IAU Apart from the number of features the atlas also provides libration maps detail maps of areas of interest e g Apollo landing sites and a comprehensive index with all main and sub features The main maps overlap for ease of use in areas on the edge of each map To increase compatibility with existing observing references the atlas follows the system of R kl s Atlas of the Moon where the surface of the Moon is divided into 76 individual maps This small scale allows the observer to identify not only the main features but also all sub features Where a smaller scale is necessary detail maps have been added to the atlas The basis of each map is high resolution imagery of the Lunar Reconnaissance Orbiter The identification of sub features is less ambiguous compared to other common maps by using numbers with a reference to the full name on opposing pages Lunar observers often still refer to features that used to be identified on maps but are not noted anywhere anymore on modern lunar maps rilles elevations and smaller craters whose names have ceased to be identified on official maps of the Moon Hundreds such features exist and are identified in this Atlas Features that are officially carried by the IAU and those that are not are differentiated by colour

Maps of the Moon Thomás A. S. Haddad, 2019-12-30 When does a depiction of the moon become a lunar map This publication addresses this question from theoretical and historical standpoints It is argued that moon maps are of crucial importance to the history of cartography for they challenge established notions of what a map is how it functions what its purposes are and what kind of power it embodies and performs The publication also shows how terrestrial cartography has shaped the history of lunar mapping since the seventeenth century through visual and nomenclature conventions the cultural currency of maps mapmakers social standing and data gathering and projection practices It further demonstrates that lunar cartography has also been organized by an internal principle that is born of the fundamental problem of how to create static map spaces capable of representing a referent that is constantly changing to our eyes as is the visible face of the moon It is suggested that moon maps may be classed in three broad categories according to the kinds of solutions for this representational problem that have been devised over the last 400 years
