Atmospheric Tidal Dynamics E D Regio:

Atmospheric Tidal Dynamics and E- and D-region Physics COSPAR. Scientific Assembly, 1998 Paperback Our knowledge of the dynamics of the upper atmosphere has increased substantially with the launch of NASA's Upper Atmosphere Research Satellite UARS The winds associated with tides and planetary scale disturbances have been found to be significantly larger than expected What has been even more surprising is the extent to which airglow variability is controlled by these dynamics Variations in airglow emission rate have been observed for many decades but until the global scale picture became available their origin remained a mystery Hence this session on Influence of Tides on Species Concentrations was particularly timely This volume consists of papers presented at the session including model results satellite observations and ground based observations What is clear from this volume is the very dominant role of dynamics in airglow variability and species concentrations Experimental papers deal with GLO observations of E and F
