Welsh Folk-lore: a Collection of the Folk-tales and Legends of North Wales Elias Owen,1896 Catalogue of the Coptic Manuscripts in the Collection of the John Rylands Library, Manchester John Rylands Library,Walter Ewing Crum,1909 Welsh Folk-Lore and Other Fairy Tales: A Collection of the Folk-Tales and Legends of North Wales William Elliot Griffis,Marion Florence Lansing,Wilhelm Hauff,Elias Owen,1921-01-01 Long long ago there was a good saint named David who taught the early Cymric or Welsh people better manners and many good things to eat and ways of enjoying themselves Now the Welsh folks in speaking of their good teacher pronounced his name Tafid and affectionately Taffy and this came to be the usual name for a person born in Wales In our nurseries we all learned that Taffy was a Welshman but it was their enemies who made a bad rhyme about Taffy Wherever there were cows or goats people could get milk So they always had what was necessary for a good meal whether it were breakfast dinner or supper Milk cream curds whey and cheese enriched the family table Were not these enough But Saint David taught the people how to make a still more delicious food out of cheese and that this could be done without taking the life of any creature Saint David showed the girls how to take cheese slice and toast it over the coals or melt it in a skillet and pour it hot over toast or biscuit This gave the cheese a new and sweeter flavor When spread on bread either plain or browned over the fire the result in combination was a delicacy fit for a king and equal to anything known The fame of this new addition to the British bill of fare spread near and far The English people who had always been fond of rabbit pie and still eat thousands of Molly Cotton Tails every day named it Welsh Rabbit and thought it one of the best things to eat In fact there are many people who do not easily see a joke who misunderstand the fun or who suppose the name to be either slang or vulgar or a mistake and who call it rarebit It is like Cape Cod turkey codfish or Bombay ducks dried fish or Irish plums potatoes and such funny cookery with fancy names Now up to this time the rabbits and hares had been so hunted with the aid of dogs that there was hardly a chance of any of them surviving the cruel slaughter In the year 604 the Prince of Powys was out hunting The dogs started a hare and pursued it into a dense thicket When the hunter with the horn came up a strange sight met his eyes There he saw a lovely maiden She was kneeling on the ground and devoutly praying Though surprised at this the prince was anxious to secure his game He hissed on the hounds and ordered the horn to be blown for the dogs to charge on their prey expecting them to bring him the game at once Instead of this though they were trained dogs and would fight even a wolf they slunk away howling and frightened as if in pain while the horn stuck fast to the lips of the blower and he was silent

Meanwhile the hare nestled under the maiden's dress and seemed not in the least disturbed. Amazed at this, the prince turned to the fair lady and asked, "Who are you?" She answered, "My mother named me Monacella. I have fled from Ireland where my father wished to marry me to one of his chief men whom I did not love. Under God's guidance I came to this secret desert place where I have lived for fifteen years without seeing the face of man. To this, the prince in admiration replied, "O most worthy Melangell, which is the way the Welsh pronounce Monacella because on account of thy merits it has pleased God to shelter and save this little wild hare. I on my part herewith present thee with this land to be for the service of God and an asylum for all men and women who seek thy protection. So long as they do not pollute this sanctuary, let none, not even prince or chieftain, drag them forth. The beautiful saint passed the rest of her life in this place. At night she slept on the bare rock. Many were the wonders wrought for those who with pure hearts sought her refuge. The little wild hares were under her special protection and they are still called Melangell's Lambs. After the Cymric folk, that is the people we call Welsh, had come up from Cornwall into their new land, they began to cut down the trees to build towns and to have fields and gardens. Soon they made the landscape smile with pleasant homes, rich farms, and playing children. They trained vines and made flowers grow. The young folks made pets of the wild animals, cubs which their fathers and big brothers brought home from hunting. Old men took rushes and reeds and wove them into cages for song birds to live in. While they were draining the swamps and bogs, they drove out the monsters that had made their lair in these wet places. These terrible creatures liked to poison people with their bad breath and even ate up very little boys and girls when they strayed away from home. So all the face of the open country between the forests became very pretty to look at. The whole of Cymric land, which then extended from the northern Grampian Hills to Cornwall and from the Irish Sea past their big fort, afterward called London, even to the edge of the German Ocean, became a delightful place to live in. The lowlands and the rivers in which the tide rose and fell daily were especially attractive. This was chiefly because of the many bright flowers growing there, while the yellow gorse and the pink heather made the hills look as lovely as a young girl's face. Besides this, the Cymric maidens were the prettiest ever and the lads were all brave and healthy while both of these knew how to sing often and well. Now there was a great monster named the Afang that lived in a big bog hidden among the high hills and inside of a dark, rough forest. This ugly creature had an iron-clad back and a long tail that could wrap itself around a mountain. It had four front legs with big knees that were bent up like a grasshopper's but were covered with scales like armor. These were as hard as steel and bulged out at the thighs. Along its back was a ridge of horn-like spines and higher than an alligator's. Against such a tough hide, when the hunters shot their darts and hurled their javelins, these weapons fell down to the ground like harmless pins. On this monster's head were big ears half way between those of a jackass and an elephant. Its eyes were as green as leeks and were round but scalloped on the edges like squashes while they were as big as pumpkins. The Afang's face was much like a monkey's or a gorilla's with long straggling gray hairs around its cheeks like those of a walrus. It always looked as if a napkin as big as a bath towel would be necessary to keep its mouth clean Yet even then it slobbered a good deal so that no nice fairy liked to be near the monster When the Afang growled the bushes shook and the oak leaves trembled on the branches as if a strong wind was blowing But after its dinner when it had swallowed down a man or two calves or four sheep or a fat heifer or three goats its body swelled up like a balloon Then it usually rolled over lay along the ground or in the soft mud and felt very stupid and sleepy for a long while All around its lair lay wagon loads of bones of the creatures girls women men boys cows and occasionally a donkey which it had devoured But when the Afang was ravenously hungry and could not get these animals and when fat girls and careless boys were scarce it would live on birds beasts and fishes Although it was very fond of cows and sheep yet the wool and hair of these animals stuck in its big teeth it often felt very miserable and its usually bad temper grew worse Then like a beaver it would cut down a tree sharpen it to a point and pick its teeth until its mouth was clean Yet it seemed all the more hungry and eager for fresh human victims to eat especially juicy maidens just as children like cake more than bread The Cymric men were not surprised at this for they knew that girls were very sweet and they almost worshiped women So they learned to guard their daughters and wives They saw that to do such things as eating up people was in the nature of the beast which could never be taught good manners But what made them mad beyond measure was the trick which the monster often played upon them by breaking the river banks and the dykes which with great toil they had built to protect their crops Then the waters overflowed all their farms ruined their gardens and spoiled their cow houses and stables This sort of mischief the Afang liked to play especially about the time when the oat and barley crops were ripe and ready to be gathered to make cakes and flummery that is sour oat jelly or pap So it often happened that the children had to do without their cookies and porridge during the winter Sometimes the floods rose so high as to wash away the houses and float the cradles Even those with little babies in them were often seen on the raging waters and sent dancing on the waves down the river to the sea Once in a while a mother cat and all her kittens were seen mewing for help or a lady dog howling piteously Often it happened that both puppies and kittens were drowned So whether for men or mothers pussies or puppies the Cymric men thought the time had come to stop this monster s mischief It was bad enough that people should be eaten up but to have all their crops ruined and animals drowned so that they had to go hungry all winter with only a little fried fish and no turnips was too much for human patience There were too many weeping mothers and sorrowful fathers and squalling brats and animals whining for something to eat Besides if all the oats were washed away how could their wives make flummery without which no Cymric man is ever happy And where would they get seed for another year s sowing And if there were no cows how could the babies or kitties live or any grown up persons get buttermilk Someone may ask why did not some brave man shoot the Afang with a poisoned arrow or drive a spear into him under the arms where the flesh was tender or cut off his head with a sharp sword The trouble was just here There were plenty of brave fellows ready to fight the monster but nothing made of iron could pierce that hide of his This was like armor or one of the steel battleships of our day and the Afang always spit out fire or poison breath down the road up which a man was coming long before the brave fellow could get near him Nothing would do but to go up into his lair and drag him out But what man or company of men was strong enough to do this when a dozen giants in a gang with ropes as thick as a ship s hawser could hardly tackle the job Nevertheless in what neither man nor giant could do a pretty maiden might succeed True she must be brave also for how could she know but if hungry the Afang might eat her up However one valiant damsel of great beauty who had lots of perfumery and plenty of pretty clothes volunteered to bind the monster in his lair She said I m not afraid Her sweetheart was named Gadern and he was a young and strong hunter He talked over the matter with her and they two resolved to act together Gadern went all over the country summoning the farmers to bring their ox teams and log chains Then he set the blacksmiths to work forging new and especially heavy ones made of the best native iron from the mines for which Wales is still famous Meanwhile the lovely maiden arrayed herself in her prettiest clothes dressed her hair in the most enticing way hanging a white blossom on each side over her ears with one flower also at her neck When she had perfumed her garments she sallied forth and up the lake where the big bog and the waters were and where the monster hid himself While the maiden was still quite a distance away the terrible Afang scenting his visitor from afar came rushing out of his lair When very near he reared his head high in the air expecting to pounce on her with his iron clad claws and at one swallow make a breakfast of the girl But the odors of her perfumes were so sweet that he forgot what he had thought to do Moreover when he looked at her he was so taken with unusual beauty that he flopped at once on his forefeet Then he behaved just like a lovelorn beau when his best girl comes near He ties his necktie and pulls down his coat and brushes off the collar So the Afang began to spruce up It was real fun to see how a monster behaves when smitten with love for a pretty girl He had no idea how funny he was The girl was not at all afraid but smoothed the monster s back stroked and played with its big moustaches and tickled its neck until the Afang s throat actually gurgled with a laugh Pretty soon he guffawed for he was so delighted When he did this the people down in the valley thought it was thunder though the sky was clear and blue The maiden tickled his chin and even put up his whiskers in curl papers Then she stroked his neck so that his eyes closed Soon she had gently lulled him to slumber by singing a cradle song which her mother had taught her This she did so softly and sweetly that in a few minutes with its head in her lap the monster was sound asleep and even began to snore Then quietly from their hiding places in the bushes Gadern and his men crawled out When near the dreaded Afang they stood up and sneaked forward very softly on tip toe They had wrapped the links of the chain in grass and leaves so that no clanking was heard They also held the oxen s yokes so that nobody or anything could rattle or make any noise Slowly but surely they passed the chain over its body in the middle besides binding the brute securely between its fore and hind legs
