In those days no body knew of electrons, protons or neutrons and therefore nobody had any idea, factual or intuitive, about the internal structure of an atom.

After J.J. Thomson discovered the electron in 1897, it was realized that atoms might have an internal structure. Which meant that they are not fundamental unit upon which matter is built. However it was unknown how the electrons were distributed in the atom. In 1904 the, so-called, "Plum Pudding Model" was put forth for the internal structure of the atom. In this model the negative electrons were assumed to float in a soup of positive charge, much like plums in a pudding or raisins in a fruit cake.
