Manipulate the  $r_0$  (green)  $k$  and  $b$  (red) sliders (positive/negative) gain

Click on Force then Structure buttons below the window

How the force responds when the parameters (force) used is related to the graphed parameter (structure) across a range of distances

Investigating the force parameters help define graph

Click on Force structure. Note the atomic number and interaction strength clearly highlighted. get values for force the graph and the force/structure relationship equations

1. Start with structure (distance) at large positive and negative enough being at least 1000 Å
  - a. What are the force values in the stable equilibrium region now?

2. What does the force/structure graph look like?

How is structure when the atoms have a positive repulsive force versus negative attractive force

3. Manipulate the parameters around a positive and/or negative interaction strength and/or distance
  - a. How did the force/structure graph change?

How force is force the force/structure behavior in stable equilibrium region

4. How did the force/structure graph change?
