Privacy-Preserving in Edge Computing Longxiang Gao, Tom H. Luan, Bruce Gu, Youyang Qu, Yong Xiang, 2021-06-01
With the rapid development of big data it is necessary to transfer the massive data generated by end devices to the cloud under the traditional cloud computing model However the delays caused by massive data transmission no longer meet the requirements of various real time mobile services Therefore the emergence of edge computing has been recently developed as a new computing paradigm that can collect and process data at the edge of the network which brings significant convenience to solving problems such as delay bandwidth and off loading in the traditional cloud computing paradigm By extending the functions of the cloud to the edge of the network edge computing provides effective data access control computation processing and storage for end devices Furthermore edge computing optimizes the seamless connection from the cloud to devices which is considered the foundation for realizing the interconnection of everything However due to the open features of edge computing such as content awareness real time computing and parallel processing the existing problems of privacy in the edge computing environment have become more prominent The access to multiple categories and large numbers of devices in edge computing also creates new privacy issues In this book we discuss on the research background and current research process of privacy protection in edge computing In the first chapter the state of the art research of edge computing are reviewed The second chapter discusses the data privacy issue and attack models in edge computing Three categories of privacy preserving schemes will be further introduced in the following chapters Chapter three introduces the context aware privacy preserving scheme Chapter four further introduces a location aware differential privacy preserving scheme Chapter five presents a new blockchain based decentralized privacy preserving in edge computing Chapter six summarize this monograph and propose future research directions In summary this book introduces the following techniques in edge computing 1 describe an MDP based privacy preserving model to solve context aware data privacy in the hierarchical edge computing paradigm 2 describe a SDN based clustering methods to solve the location aware privacy problems in edge computing 3 describe a novel blockchain based decentralized privacy preserving scheme in edge computing These techniques enable the rapid development of privacy preserving in edge computing
