

BALTIMORE GLIMPSES—It's characters that make a city

A SHORT TIME BACK Rand McNally published a list of cities, ranking them - according to its own criteria - by "desirability" as places to live. Pittsburgh, it decided, was No. 1; Baltimore was way down - No. 15 Burn rap, says Glimpses. Just look at the criteria: "Climate, terrain, health care, environment, transportation." Bull. What city buff cares about that stuff? If Rand McNally really wanted to determine what gives a city its "desirability" as a place to live it should have had the good sense to include in its criteria a city's ability to turn out town characters. Characters make a city. Which means that Baltimore should have been in first place, hands down. Did Pittsburgh ever have a John Cypulski? John was a skirt-blower-upper in the Fun House at old Carlin's Amusement Park in the 1950s. The Fun House was, literally, a house full of fun - and games and spooks and odd goings-on. As young girls (wearing dresses; none wore slacks in those days) walked from one attraction to the next, they would unknowingly walk across tiny holes in the floor. Up through these holes came blasts of air, sending the girls' skirts ballooning - amid loud shrieks. It was John, hidden from the victims, who had the job of pressing the air-release button at precisely the right moment. "It's an art," he used to say, savoring his special status. "I never miss." A city that produces a John Cypulski sounds like a barrel of laughs to live in, no? And how about Marie Basernschmidt, Baltimore's colorful reformer of the 1930s? She took on politicians one at a time and all together. "You've got to handle politicians with kid gloves," she used to say, "but you've got to have a rock in your mitt." She told former Mayor Jackson that if he ran for office she would expose him as an alcoholic. He did. She did. Now if you were choosing a city to live in, wouldn't one with characters like this appeal to you? Or how about Willie Curran? He was the famous political power broker (1920s-1930s) who laced his streetcorner speeches to blue collar workers with erudite Latin quotes: "Res ipse loquitur," once told a screaming, shirt-sleeved audience that was begging him to run for governor, but which, not schooled in Latin, had no idea what he was talking about. Just one more show Baltimore always seems to be putting on to keep life interesting. And what about Raymond Miles? On duty as a traffic policeman at Lombard and South in the 1950s, in the muggy heat of Baltimore's Augusts, he kept cool by keeping a cabbage leaf soaked in ice water plastered over his head - out of sight, under his cap. "Be surprised how cool a wet cabbage leaf over your head can keep you in the hot Baltimore weather," he would explain. Then there was Baltimore's most famous newsboy, Freddie Gold. He worked the Read's Drug corner of Howard and Lexington streets, boy and man, for 60 years (he died in 1963). He wore two sweaters, two ties, two shirts, two pairs of trousers. Asked why, he answered sensibly enough, "Because I like to." True, Cypulski was a little crazy; Basernschmidt, paranoid; Curran, an egomaniac; Raymond Miles, considered by his colleagues as odd; Freddie Gold a lovable eccentric. But they all gave the city, each in his or her own way, special and distinguishing color, tone, passion. Far more of what, in the end, it takes to make a city fun to live in than do "climate, terrain, health care, environment, transportation." All in all, we demand a recount.
