Combustion of Coal and the Prevention of Smoke William Miller Barr,1900 Combustion of Coal and the Prevention of Smoke William Miller Barr,1904 Performance and Economics of Co-firing a Coal ,1996 This study s objective was to investigate co firing a pressurized fluidized bed combustor with coal and refuse derived fuel for the production of electricity and the efficient disposal of waste Performance evaluation of the pressurized fluidized bed combustor PFBC power plant co fired with refuse derived fuel showed only slightly lower overall thermal efficiency than similar sized plants without waste co firing Capital costs and costs of electricity are within 4 2 percent and 3 2 percent respectively of waste free operation The results also indicate that there are no technology barriers to the co firing of waste materials with coal in a PFBC power plant The potential to produce cost competitive electrical power and support environmentally acceptable waste disposal exists with this approach However as part of technology development there remain several design and operational areas requiring data and verification before this concept can realize commercial acceptance 3 refs 3 figs 4 tabs First Report of the Departmental Committee on Spontaneous Combustion of Coal

Experience of Cofiring Waste with Coal Robert M. Davidson,1999-01-01 Fossil Energy Update ,1983 Co-Firing of Waste with Coal in a Fluidised Bed Combustor Suthum Patumsawad,2010-04 This book highlights on the co firing of MSW in a fluidised bed combustor in terms of combustion efficiency and characteristics to assess the potential advantages offered by fluidised bed combustors over conventional methods of burning The influence of various combustor operation parameters on the combustion efficiency and characteristics is determined However wastes are variable in nature the combustion conditions suitable for one particular type of waste may not be so for another type Hence the combustion efficiencies and compatibility of different wastes in a fluidised bed combustor operating under given sets of conditions is one area of investigation A comparison of the experimental results obtained from the combustion of coal with co firing waste with coal under equivalent conditions is made and the effect of the combustion characteristics of co firing waste with coal is also investigated Co firing in FBC demonstrates the capability of supplement either MSW or other high moisture content wastes efficiently in existing coal fired boilers with minimum modification Waste Daniel D. Lowell,2010 Coal fired power plants account for almost 45% of electric power generated in the United States The coal combustion process at those facilities generates a tremendous amount of waste In 2008 industry estimates indicate that 136 million tons of coal combustion waste CCW was generated That would make CCW the second largest waste stream in the United States second to municipal solid waste or common household garbage How CCW is managed and how those management methods are regulated have come under increased scrutiny in recent years This book examines the potential harm from CCW to human health and the environment and delves into the investigation of the management of CCW which is essentially exempt from federal regulation Strategic Analysis of Biomass and Waste Fuels for Electric Power
