

The gorget was of gilt metal with silver Royal Arms in the centre and on each side an engraved Garter Star (the whole hat with blue ribbon and mouset). Equipment was of whitened leather having a small rectangular gilt belt-stuff with the design of the Lion within a Crowned Garter (the late Mr P. W. Reynolds records that all the Grenadier companies of the Regiment of Foot Guards had this plate). The pompadour hair or pouch, black polished leather, the badge a gilt Garter Star with a grenade in gilt above. The officers had a sword bayonet for their scabbard, the having a black leather scabbard with a gilt tip (On May 2 1792, a General Order, ordering all officers of Grenadier companies to make use of their swords, instead of forks and bayonets and to give up these along with the pouch-belt and pouch. The sword to be their only weapon.) A white waist-coat and breeches with gilt buttons, crimson sash, and buff boots with tanover tops in black leather, laced-up flap shoes.

The head-dress for the Officer of the Battalion Company was a black felt bicorne with gold cord to and black silk bow. Hair was bleached and powdered and on a club with black silk hair and ribbons.

The officer wore the full dress coat which differed from the 'Front' described above in having a smaller collar and the buttonholes lined with gold loops and an elastic ring of gilt lace round the cuffs, the pockets were lined similar to the front but in much broader gilt lace, there was no lace running down the seam from the waist to the bottom of the skirt. The lace edging the turnbacks had a fine blue feathering on the inside edge. The turnback following was the same as the Grenadier but had no grenade. Buttons were gilt as described above. The epaulettes for Battalion companies was worn on the right shoulder only, for junior officers, and in this case of the same design as described for the Grenadier officer but omitting the grenade.

The gorget was the same as the Grenadier. The sword belt of whitened leather, gilt shoulder-belt plate with beaded edge, silver Garter Star with blue enamel Garter and red enamel gilt motto. Sword had a gilt hilt, gilt and scabbard covered brass, the blade decorated with a blue and gilt filigree design. The ornament of the scabbard was as for the Grenadier.

Fig 16: Corporal and Private of the Battalion Company in Marching Order, 1790

The figures are based on the water-colours of E. Dears and a series of plates illustrating the Manual Exercise with the musket and bayonet which was published in 1790.

The head-dress is the black cocked hat, plain without lace and having stiffeners back and front, a rounded top and regimental button with a white leather plume with a black tip. The hat had a black tape across each side, which was tied together under the hair on the back to keep the hat in place on the head. Hair was powdered and tied with black ribbon, braided and floured. The skirt and sleeves ends were white. The coat was red with blue collar, lapels, cuffs and epaulettes straps, the whole lined around with plain white lace, lined all over by two or three, cuffs and pocket flaps. All buttons were white metal.

The corporal wears a white silk laced epaulettes on his right shoulder and a plain one on the left, the private, of course, had two plain unlined epaulettes. Waistcoat and breeches are in white cloth with black pattern, all having white metal buttons. Shoes are black.

Equipment is whitened leather, the pouch-belt having brass buckles and tips, and black polished pouch with brass Garter Star badge. Black sword scabbard had the Garter Star painted in the centre in full colour, white stars blue pattern, set cross and barbed in gold on the garter. 'CORPORAL' or 'PRIVATE' Support straps were of whitened leather. Beyond waistcoat was shirt with brass buttons, whitened leather sling and brass corner buckle were attached for the musket.

Button 1790: A general button of the other ranks, the button was flat with the design in low relief. Officers had a similar design, but in gilt metal.

Button 1792: Other ranks button in pewter, the design was still in low relief and flat.

The officer's button of this period was flat gilt and the same design but engraved.

Belt-Plate Orn: This plate was brass and had the design die-stamped.

Fig 17: Sergeants of the Battalion and Grenadier Companies, c. 1790

The uniform detail of these two figures is from contemporary water-colour by E. Dears and shows clearly the dress of sergeants of the 2nd or Coldstream Guards at the period.

The Battalion company sergeant in Full Dress has the black felt cocked hat with stiffeners in the front and back, no lace round the brim. In 1790 it was ordered that the rule of the WCOB and men of the Foot Guards to be without
