Cognitive Rehabilitation Lance E. Trexler, 2012-12-06 The present volume has come about through an awareness of the absence of any cohesive and substantive source on the treatment of cognitive dysfunction following brain insult I initiated the development of our annual symposium Models and Techniques of Cognitive Rehabilitation on which the present volume is based so as to educate myself as well as others about the state of the art in modifying cognitive processes in the brain injured I became aware of the need for interventive strategies for the brain injured while a graduate student Brain functions had for a long time always fascinated me but from an academic perspective I was confronted with the clinical consequences of brain injury while administering batteries of neuro psychological tests and this experience added another dimension to my interest in brain functions I felt grossly inadequate because I was able to rather eloquently describe changes in brain behavior relations with neuropsychological tests but could only generate recommendations based solely on the use of compensatory strategies and occasionally on some unfounded and probably naive remedial guess A literature search at this time yielded devastating little information The next several years were characterized by a pseudo obsession occurring at times without total awareness with methods and techniques which might alter impaired brain behavior relations Completing graduate school however required that these thoughts take a secondary position relative to more typical graduate student thoughts

Scandinavian Journal of Rehabilitation Medicine, 1991 Family Support Programs and Rehabilitation Louise Margaret Smith, Hamish P. D. Godfrey, 2013-06-29 The permanent effects of traumatic brain injury TBI are not limited to the person who suffers the injury People who care for the individual particularly family members suffer in various ways Family members are often confused as to the behavioral and neuropsychological changes that they see in a brain injured relative They can become frustrated and angry when the individual does not return to premorbid levels of functioning They can become tired and worn down from repeated problems in trying to manage the individual's difficulties while having only fragmented information regarding them Drs Smith and Godfrey have provided a useful service for family members by summarizing important neuropsychological changes associated with TBI and providing practical guidelines for coping with these problems While the neuropsychological problems they describe are not completely understood the authors provide a useful description of many of the neuro behavioral problems seen following TBI in young adults They attempt to provide guidelines for family members that have practical utility in understanding and managing these patients Theirs is a cognitive behavioral approach that can have utility for this group of individuals I applaud their efforts to provide something systematic and practical for family members Multicontext Approach to Cognitive Rehabilitation Joan Toglia Erin R.
