

The Social Cognitive Theory - Process of Goal Realization

Goal Attainment and Motivation

There are four cognitive processes that encompass the Social Cognitive Theory: Self-Evaluation, Self-Observation, Self-Reaction, and Self-Efficacy (Redmond, 2010). These processes are dependent on one another. To successfully complete a goal, a person goes thru these cognitive processes.

Self-Evaluation: the process of a person cognitively comparing their performance to the desired performance needed to achieve their goal (Bandura, 1991).

Self-Observation: the cognitive process of a person observing and monitoring themselves as they work towards their goal (Zimmerman, 2001).

Self-Reaction: the cognitive process a person goes thru in which they modify their behavior based on their evaluation of their progress towards their goal (Bandura, 1991).

Self-Efficacy: an individual's belief in his or her capacity to execute behaviors necessary to produce specific performance attainments (Bandura, 1997).
