

Seeing change

Learning to See

You won't like this exercise. You will think it designed to frustrate you, because you, or how you present, take the process of making the shape shown in figure 27. The exercise is designed to test your throwing skills so much as your seeing skills.

Here are some pots made in response to the exercise (figure 27). Assuming the potter put the clay exactly where they wanted, the pots will fail to duplicate the required shape precisely. The reason is a lack of attention to detail. They do not see the details. It shows the relationship of height to width and relationship of the parts to one another. It shows the relationship of the belly occurring midway on the bottom and how it is made up of a curve rolling in at the shoulder for forming a neck to the base. It also makes clear the similar diameter of the neck, base, and neck.

Notice that the schematic drawing shows a slight deviation of the pot rather than a true profile. It is not to look at a true profile, and, for that matter, potter's sketches are not the maker's true profiles either because the upper half is not placed there the work is to be done. In general, the potter will make judgments from true profiles. Like the drawing of the Italian Renaissance chapel ceiling, a pot must be designed in some of its aspects to create the desired response when seen at a typical angle.

Analyzing a pot by placing it on a grid is a means of developing the skill of accurate observation. To see what the pot develops a sort of mental grid, an awareness of relationships

...of the pot to ground, just as if you have no desire to repeat identical shapes, you should be able to produce the same shape in your mind's eye. Visualizations are more than they may begin to be that way; they are more than they are. Even if you prefer appearance and not reality, you are still making decisions in a way to produce ideas, you are still making decisions in order to make decisions on a moment's notice. In any case you will want to succeed eventually when you are happy to do so.

Repetition and replication are the most effective ways of learning to see. Comparing one pot to another and analyzing the details of the same shape shows you what you do and what you do not. The added bonus is that you are also getting the light on seeing. Repetition throwing is conventional in the pottery studio. The great fact is that the pots will be made by repeated throwing. Absence of this approach is a lack of awareness that results from repeating shapes is a lack of awareness for an individual surface and elastic curves. That is why the potter with each repetition. The point where plastic compression takes over elastic performance is different for each pot.

You can do more than see by making a group of similar but not identical pots, being done up, and making them. When you do this, you will see the differences from the prototype, but you will also see the differences from comparative success and failure of the potter's work. This is seeing of a different order. You will not believe that a group of people with trained eyes would be able to judge on which pots work the best. I have found that in group situations it is easy for someone to spot the failures, but personal work is more often the strength to put the success.

All of the one training exercises discussed so far could be considered as suggesting a final point of view, in that pots were not thrown. This must be viewed from all directions to avoid the problem of seeing the pot from the side. The exercise that sees a pot from the side is the potter's wheel produces irregularly at any point in the pot through the hands as seen from above, a pot is seen in profile of the plastic nature of clay and the maker's intention that the pot be a perfect circle. The potter's wheel is a pot, being a pot, and there is nothing to do through a full circle, keeping the
