Frank Lydston,2015-07-08 Excerpt from The Blood of the Fathers A Play in Four Acts You once wrote me this Well can you and I repeat together the words of Watson to a Laodicean Timorous hesitant voice how utterly vile I hold you Voice without wrath without ruth empty of hate as of love Different notes from these O watchman blow to the midnight Loud in a deep lulled land trumpeter sound an alarm The watchman blew loud the watchman blew long without an answering call Echoes there were to be sure there are literary parrots in the Forest of Pen Land but the deaf would not hear the bugle of warning nor would the blind see the grim visaged trumpeter on the social ramparts But they are beginning to hear and see and some of the inmates of the asylum for the deaf and blind that lies in the Land of Fatuous Optimism are now even wondering if they could not blow the trumpet louder and better than the watchman himself And so all s well because the dawn is breaking and it one day will be well About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work Forgotten Books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged

Home in Early Modern Drama Ariane M. Balizet,2014-04-24 In this volume the author argues that blood was crucially a means by which dramatists negotiated shifting contours of domesticity in 16th and 17th century England Early modern English drama vividly addressed contemporary debates over an expanding idea of the domestic which encompassed the domus as well as sex parenthood household order the relationship between home and state and the connections between family honor and national identity The author contends that the domestic ideology expressed by theatrical depictions of marriage and household order is one built on the simultaneous familiarity and violence inherent to blood The theatrical relation between blood and home is far more intricate than the idealized language of the familial bloodline the home was itself a bloody place with domestic bloodstains signifying a range of experiences including religious worship sex murder birth healing and holy justice Focusing on four bleeding figures the Bleeding Bride Bleeding Husband Bleeding Child and Bleeding Patient the author argues that the household blood of the early modern stage not only expressed the violence and conflict occasioned by domestic ideology but also established the home as a site that alternately reified and challenged patriarchal authority The blood of our fathers, let it not be shed in vain , The Ante-Nicene Fathers Alexander Roberts,Sir James
