It's Not You, It's the World Joanna Cheek,2026-02-03 What if the mental health symptoms we face aren t the actual problem What if they re signals that can help us see and solve the real problem As our world clashes and collapses around us it s no surprise that one in two of us will be diagnosed with a mental health condition by the age of forty with one in five people affected each year It s hard to view all our mental health symptoms as disordered if so many of us are experiencing them Perhaps it s not that something s gone wrong in our bodies and minds but that something s gone right These symptoms are brilliant alarms and adaptations to help us survive in a disordered world Having sensitive protective functions that sound alarms or short circuit when we re threatened isn t a design flaw It s a design success As a psychiatrist professor and mental health speaker Joanna Cheek argues that we re not broken or doing it wrong when we re stressed or struggling As our systems are pushed to the brink of collapse self improvement alone neglects the source of our suffering
