☞ RECENT TRENDS

The message is still prevalent in the minds of people living in the Western world: Eat animal protein and lots of it. One unfortunate result of this dictum has been an overemphasis on foods that contain a high amount of saturated fat. This also results in a deemphasis on plant foods, which scientists are discovering contain a wide array of health-promoting compounds such as fiber, antioxidants, and phytochemicals.

As public health issues change and nutritional science advances, it pays to be aware of a few past misconceptions. People tend to overlook the fact that the studies advocating the feeding of animal protein supplements were conducted on children whose growth was stunted due to malnutrition. However, in general, the average, healthy adult American (not including pregnant or breastfeeding mothers, or others with special nutritional needs) tends to consume far above the baseline protein need. Especially considering the influence of fad “protein diets,” as a culture we don’t tend to be protein-deficient!

The link between saturated-fat consumption and heart disease did not go unnoticed. Around 1970, the beef industry and the dairy industry both began to produce lower-fat products. The word in the media was that fat was bad—saturated fat in particular, but in general, all fat. Other food-industry sectors responded as well. Hundreds of low-fat and nonfat versions of our favorite foods appeared on supermarket shelves and were purchased with enthusiasm. The
