Acting Out Participant Examples in the Classroom Stanton E.F. Wortham, 1994-11-14

This volume explores a relational pattern that occurs during one type of speech event classroom participant examples A participant example describes as an example of something an event that includes at least one person also participating in the conversation Participants with a role in the example have two relevant identities as a student or teacher in the classroom and as a character in whatever event is described as the example This study reports that in some cases speakers not only discuss but also act out the roles assigned to them in participant examples That is speakers do with each other what they are talking about as the content of the example Participants act as if events described as the example provide a script for their interaction Drawing on linguistic pragmatics and interactional sociolinguistics the author describes the linguistic mechanisms that speakers use to act out participant examples He focuses on the role of deictics and personal pronouns in particular in establishing and organizing relationships The volume also presents a new methodological technique deictic mapping that can be used to uncover interactional organization in all sorts of speech events Drawing on the philosophy and sociology of education the volume discusses the social and educational implications of enacted participant examples Educational theorists generally find participant examples to be cognitively useful as devices to help students understand pedagogical content But enacted participant examples have systematic relational consequences as well The volume presents and discusses enacted participant examples that have clear and sometimes undesirable social consequences It also discusses how we might adjust educational theory and practice given the relational implications of classroom participant examples
