The Cost of a Home Economics Food Program in the State of Utah Joyce Leavitt Winterton,1974 The purposes of this paper are to provide a guide line for determining the budget for a Consumer and Homemaking foods program in the secondary schools of Utah and to suggest some food buying procedures In order to achieve these purposes questionnaires were sent to the 167 junior and senior high schools in the state Of the questionnaires returned 99 were complete enough to be utilized for the study 48 were from junior high schools and 51 from senior high schools For analysis the schools were grouped according to whether they were a junior or senior high school and then into large medium or small schools based on the total number of students in each school From the information on the completed questionnaires cost for one 36 weeks course in a foods program and the cost per student per hour for each school was determined The averages were then found for each category It was determined that except for the small junior high schools the cost per 36 weeks course appears to increase with a decrease in the size of the school The figures indicate that there is an inverse relationship between the cost per student per hour and the population of the schools Even though the larger schools have a greater total budget than the smaller schools they offer more courses and serve more students which results in a lower cost per student per hour and fewer dollars involved in each 36 weeks course It was also determined that the schools which purchased staple food supplies through the school district appeared to have lower costs per student per hour The results indicated that it was not necessarily cheaper to purchase food at a large chain store as compared to a small local store Allocating a budget on a total year basis seems to result in a lower total budget per year The schools which operated on more money per student hour indicated a difference in their purchasing of food which included the higher priced meats and preparing more complete meals It is suggested that teachers and administrators be aware of the quality of a foods program in relation to the costs of the program and the budget allowed for the outcomes desired

Composite Report United States. President's Committee to Study the United States Military Assistance Program,1959 Job Training Partnership Act United States. Congress. House. Committee on Government Operations. Employment, Housing, and Aviation Subcommittee,1993 This document records the oral and written testimony of witnesses at a Congressional hearing held in April 1993 to assess the costs and outcomes of the Job Training Partnership Act JTPA Witnesses included officials from the U S Department of Labor the General Accounting Office consultants retained to evaluate the program and several local Private Industry Councils PICs Testimony noted that approximately 36 million people face some type of employment barrier and are eligible to participate in JTPA programs but fewer than 2 5 percent are actually being served and only two thirds of the participants are successfully completing their training and finding employment According to a Labor Department official JTPA programs have done a good job in training for occupational skills and job search methods but have not provided very much help in improving reading and mathematics skills in persons with deficiencies in these areas and have done little in the areas of persons with disabilities Only about half the program participants found jobs after completing their programs of these only half found them through program assistance More than half the jobs paid less than 5 per hour Many of the JTPA programs operate in isolation and they fail to serve the most economically disadvantaged persons However PIC officials also offered examples of programs that have been very successful KC

How Effective are Education Programs and Policies in Improving Access and Learning for Disadvantaged Students? Minahil Asim,2020 I study the effectiveness of education policies and programs to improve academic achievement and attainment among underserved students in the K 12 education pipeline in three different country contexts My first paper investigates the role of information in strengthening local governance of schools in Punjab Pakistan My second paper is a study of distributional effects of a literacy intervention targeted at schools parents and communities in a rural district in Rwanda My third paper is an analysis of math course taking patterns among high school students in California U S A All three papers use large scale administrative and survey datasets and a combination of quasi experimental methods and descriptive data analyses to study policies and programs that directly address issues of access and learning for disadvantaged students My first paper studies the School Council Mobilization Program SCMP in Punjab Pakistan The SCMP is an information dissemination program through which the provincial government made regular and targeted phone calls to local governance institutions in education school councils comprised of parents teachers and community members The calls informed and encouraged members to utilize a budget provided by the government to improve school and student outcomes Using multiple administrative datasets and a difference in differences quasi experimental research strategy I find that SCMP schools as a result of the outreach program increased expenditure by 40 percent i e roughly USD 100 per year per school compared to non SCMP schools However facilities did not improve and additional contract teachers were not hired outcomes on which members were encouraged to spend the money Worse students in SCMP schools scored lower in Math English and Urdu by approximately one tenth of a standard deviation than students in non SCMP schools I speculate that mobilizing councils may have interfered with the time and effort teachers put in the classroom and hence made schooling worse off for students From a policy perspective while SCMP was a low cost scalable and successful program in terms of optics for the government and donor agencies education reforms in similar contexts have to be drastically re imagined if learning is what we ultimately care about For my second paper I investigate how a clustered randomized control trial in Rwanda that was intended to encourage effective classroom reading pedagogy and engage students families and communities in reading activities outside of school impacted students reading along different points of the reading achievement distribution Using a quantile treatment effects research strategy I find that the set of interventions had no impact on students at the top 90th or bottom 10th percentiles of Kinyarwanda fluency and text comprehension distributions and girls were the only beneficiaries of the program Moreover the treatment arm that focused on changing pedagogical practices in school benefited girls who were struggling to read but the treatment arm that focused on engaging families and communities along with introducing effective pedagogical practices in school benefited girls who were already at an advantage in reading I consider the response to the interventions by students parents and teachers within the cultural context of Rwanda which helps explain the disparate findings along the reading distributions My work underscores the importance of tailoring programs to the needs of different types of learners and considering whom exactly the program benefits when scaling up Finally for my last paper I explore the patterns in mathematics course taking among California public high school seniors across demographic and school characteristics I find that although a large majority of college bound students enroll in math in their final year of high school high school seniors do not equally access advanced math pathways Latinx African American and low income students are underrepresented in math courses in high schools and in the applicant pool data for post secondary institutions Similarly high poverty schools have a smaller percentage of students enrolled in advanced math courses compared to low poverty schools in 12th grade These disparities at the individual and school level directly impact students post secondary outcomes such as the likelihood of applying to and enrolling in college My work directly responds to the California State University system's proposed policy that would require students to complete a fourth year of math for college entry I argue that the additional requirements may pose barriers for students who are either discouraged by an additional step in the highly structured high school curriculum or are simply unable to access advanced courses Together these three papers contribute to the literature on the effectiveness of education programs and interventions and inform our understanding of what works and what does not work in improving educational access and outcomes for disadvantaged students in three different country contexts These papers also provide direct guidance on how policies in environments like Pakistan Rwanda and the United States can be designed to maximize the impact for the most vulnerable student populations

Pathway to Prosperity Thomas Hilliard, 2011 Even before the Great Recession prompted policymakers to take a closer look at public programs designed to help unemployed Americans re enter the workforce it had long been clear that federal state and local government workforce development programs have not always effectively prepared low income individuals to obtain decent paying jobs Job training and workforce preparedness programs are far from a bust they have moved countless out of work individuals into jobs and in recent years many local workforce development systems like the one in New York City have clearly improved However the workforce systems in New York and across the United States have been far less successful in helping individuals develop new skills or upgrade their skills to be better positioned over the long term to access the kinds of jobs that offer decent wages and clear opportunities for advancement In response to these shortcomings a number of states have developed creative approaches to improve training of adult workers In Illinois the state economic development agency has launched a system of community business partnerships that develop job linked training initiatives In Washington State community colleges have built a team teaching system to provide integrated adult literacy and vocational instruction And in several states most notably Oregon Kentucky and Arkansas state leaders have adopted a model called Career Pathways which integrates education workforce development employment and supportive services in a way that keeps workers moving forward to achieve family supporting wages While these models are diverse in structure they all focus on providing deeper and more diverse skills training informed as directly as possible by employer needs New York has also begun the process of remaking its workforce development system with an unusually strong commitment to the most disadvantaged adults In 2008 New York launched the Career Pathways program a joint initiative of the Office of Temporary and Disability Assistance OTDA and Department of Labor NYSDOL Over the last three years New York has invested over 22 million in federal public assistance and workforce dollars in Career Pathways a small portion of the state workforce training budget but substantially more than most states have committed to new approaches This study provides the first assessment of how New York's foray into Career Pathways is working The author finds that while New York's Career Pathway program falls short of similar efforts in other states in critical ways the program represents a significant step forward for workforce development in New York City and with the right support and a few adjustments could provide the cornerstone for a new better integrated workforce system This report was edited by Jonathan Bowles Andrew Breslau and Lydia Wileden Contains 4 tables 2 charts and 17 endnotes United States Air Force Research Initiation Program. 1984 Research Reports Robert W.
