Norris, 2000-04-26 Reinventing government is a well established political program that has been pursued in a number of forms throughout the twentieth century Many of these programs share similar goals of economy and efficacy but they have suffered largely from a persistent inability to achieve their objectives in any significant way In this timely work Michael Norris perceptively analyzes the reasons for the failure of recent programs to correct the weaknesses of government He argues that the current reinvention movement has fallen well short of its original goals and demonstrates that the disparity between the original claims of the movement and its results to date has been caused by structural political bureaucratic and internal barriers Norris meticulously examines each of these barriers providing new insights and potential solutions to the long standing problem of government inefficiency Those with an interest in political science American government and public policy will find much to their liking in this thought provoking volume

Electronic Government and Electronic Signatures Harold Relyea, Richard M. Nunno, 2000 During the final decade of the 20th century a new concept began to emerge in American political and governmental parlance electronic government Initially the term was little more than a general recognition of a confluence of information technology developments and the application and use of these technologies by government entities Subsequently it has oftentimes been used a symbol an ambiguous reference to both current applications of information technology to government operations and a goal of realising more efficient and economical performance of government functions It is a dynamic concept of varying meaning and significance This book reviews the emerging concept of electronic government or e government describes the policy environment defining and shaping it and discusses some to the components of e government implementation A separate section on electronic signatures is presented The Wendell H.
