The Conceptual Framework (CF), published by the International Accounting Standards Board (IASB), serves as a guide for nations creating general-purpose financial reports (GPFs) for organizations (Gore & Zimmerman, 2007). This study attempts to critically evaluate the decision of the IASB to limit the primary users of the GPFs in the 2010 and 2018 CF to financiers only from a stakeholder theory perspective. This study used a qualitative meta-analysis method to incorporate earlier qualitative studies in the area to derive deeper meanings through an interpretive process. This study reaffirms the ongoing issue of why the IASB supports the financiers as the primary user group of GPFs. We found that the managerial branch of stakeholder theory fully supports the decision of the IASB to limit the primary user of the GPFs to financiers only as management considers the financiers as the most influential stakeholder group whose information needs must be fulfilled under all the circumstances. This study has added to the existing body of knowledge by bringing much-needed clarity to the preparers of GPFs. However, from a broad user and other theoretical standpoint, we strongly advise future studies to critically analyze the implications of the IASB's decision to reclassify financiers only as the primary users of GPFs.

1. INTRODUCTION

The International Accounting Standards Board (IASB) issues the Conceptual Framework (CF) and accounting standards as a guideline for use by organizations in preparing general-purpose financial reports (GPFs) (Gore & Zimmerman, 2007). The IASB is an independent accounting standard setter that contains a group of experts that develop the CF for use as a governing document on the financial reporting process for use by all countries to harmonize the financial reporting process across the globe. The IASB was established in 1973 in London under its previous name, International Accounting Standards Committee. In 2001, the name was revised to the IASB to provide more independence to the board and come under the International Financial Reporting Standards (IFRS) Foundation¹. The CF of the IASB has come a long way since 1989 to the current 2018 CF which was released in March 2018 (Raj & Azam, 2023).
