Compromise Of Liberal Environmentalism:

The Compromise of Liberal Environmentalism Steven Bernstein, 2001-09-11 The most significant shift in environmental governance over the last thirty years has been the convergence of environmental and liberal economic norms toward liberal environmentalism which predicated environmental protection on the promotion and maintenance of a liberal economic order Steven Bernstein assesses the reasons for this historical shift introduces a socio evolutionary explanation for the selection of international norms and considers the implications for our ability to address global environmental problems The author maintains that the institutionalization of sustainable development at the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development UNCED legitimized the evolution toward liberal environmentalism Arguing that most of the literature on international environmental politics is too rationalist and problem specific Bernstein challenges the mainstream thinking on international cooperation by showing that it is always for some purpose or goal His analysis of the norms that guide global environmental policy also challenges the often presumed primacy of science in environmental governance

The Compromise of Liberal Environmentalism Steven Franklin Bernstein, 1997 This thesis investigates the convergence of environmental and liberal economic norms in international environmental governance since 1972 It argues that the institutionalization of sustainable development at the 1992 UN Conference on Environment and Development UNCED legitimated this evolution toward liberal environmentalism Norms of liberal environmentalism promote and maintain a liberal economic order with minimum disruptions to ecological systems This compromise enabled environmental concerns to gain greater prominence on the international agenda First the thesis maps the evolution of norms to uncover patterns of environmental governance Second it explains why environmental governance developed as it did The thesis traces the evolution of environmental norms through the 1972 UN Conference on the Human Environment the 1987 World Commission on Environment and Development report and the 1992 UNCED The focus on norms which define regulate and legitimate state and other actors identities values and behaviours draws attention to the content of international governance Hence explanations for the observed normative developments address two questions What actors and institutions carried ideas that led to liberal environmentalism And why did the ideas associated with such norms become institutionalized After discounting power and interest based explanations the thesis tests two explanations that focus on the causal role of ideas in international politics It finds that an epistemic communities explanation which focuses on the influence of a scientific ecology community of experts fails in a crucial test for the approach This result challenges the often assumed primacy of science in environmental governance The thesis then introduces an alternative socio evolutionary approach which draws on recent work on the evolution of international norms It argues that to understand how new norms become institutionalized requires an analysis of the interaction of ideas and the social structure they encounter Three factors determine the success of new ideas and the norms they support the legitimacy of their source their fitness with existing international social structure and the degree to which key actors identify their social interests with those ideas The findings contribute to the literature on ideas norms and international governance and to an understanding of continuity and change in international politics

Speaking Private Authority Roberto J. Flores, 2020-05-26 Speaking Private Authority The Construction of Sustainability in Forests and Fisheries expands upon current understandings of the emergent global phenomenon that is private authority As private authority is becoming increasingly important in the conduct of global governance broadening our collective understanding of it will prove beneficial Roberto J Flores argues that private actors are not simply outgrowths of existent social structures or material conditions rather they are purposive agents strategically pursuing an agenda Therefore explaining private authority requires an examination of the constitutive elements that underlie this social phenomenon to which the author applies an analytical framework that combines social network theory with discourse analysis The author applies these tools to two cases taken from the environmental sector forests and fisheries and finds that as environmental politics takes on an increasingly networked character the actors that are best able to generate and wield private authority are those that strategically place themselves in between networks through the construction of discursive nodal points around which competing actors are forced to converge at the level of identity The case studies specifically look at how particular actors leveraged construction of the sustainable development concept in order to strategically place themselves in advantageous positions for exercising private authority
