Computational Theory Of Writing Systems:

A Computational Theory of Writing Systems Richard William Sproat, 2000-07-03 This book develops a formal computational theory of writing systems It offers specific proposals about the linguistic objects that are represented by orthographic elements what levels of linguistic representation are involved and how they may differ across writing systems and what formal constraints hold of the mapping relation between linguistic and orthographic elements Based on the insights gained Sproat then proposes a taxonomy of writing systems The treatment of theoretical linguistic issues and their computational implementation is complemented with discussion of empirical psycholinguistic work on reading and its relevance for the computational model developed here Throughout the model is illustrated with a number of detailed case studies of writing systems around the world This book will be of interest to students and researchers in a variety of fields including theoretical and computational linguistics the psycholinguistics of reading and writing and speech technology

Language, Technology, and Society Richard Sproat, 2010-04-29 This book traces the history of language technology from writing the first technology specifically designed for language to digital speech and other contemporary language systems The book describes the social impact of technological developments over five millennia and addresses topics such as the ways in which literacy has influenced cognitive and scientific development the social impact of modern speech technology the influence of various printing technologies the uses and limitations of machine translation how far mass information access is a means for exploitation or enlightenment the deciphering of ancient scripts and technical aids for people with language disabilities Richard Sproat writes in a clear readable style introducing linguistic and other scientific concepts as they are needed His book offers fascinating reading for everyone interested in how language and technology have shaped and continue to shape our day to day lives
