The revolution in accessible computer technology was fueled by disability activism the interactive nature of personal computers and changing public policy In 1974 not long after developing the first universal optical character recognition technology Raymond Kurzweil struck up a conversation with a blind man on a flight Kurzweil explained that he was searching for a use for his new software The blind man expressed interest One of the frustrating obstacles that blind people grappled with he said was that no computer program could translate text into speech Inspired by this chance meeting Kurzweil decided that he must put his new innovation to work to overcome this principal handicap of blindness By 1976 he had built a working prototype which he dubbed the Kurzweil Reading Machine This type of innovation demonstrated the possibilities of computers to dramatically improve the lives of people living with disabilities In Making Computers Accessible Elizabeth R Petrick tells the compelling story of how computer engineers and corporations gradually became aware of the need to make computers accessible for all people Motivated by user feedback and prompted by legislation such as the Americans with Disabilities Act which offered the promise of equal rights via technological accommodation companies developed sophisticated computerized devices and software to bridge the accessibility gap People with disabilities Petrick argues are paradigmatic computer users demonstrating the personal computer's potential to augment human abilities and provide for new forms of social professional and political participation Bridging the history of technology science and technology studies and disability studies this book traces the psychological cultural and economic evolution of a consumer culture aimed at individuals with disabilities who increasingly rely on personal computers to make their lives richer and more interconnected Computer Technology for the Handicapped in Special Education and Rehabilitation Gary Nave, 1983 Contains 191 annotated bibliographical listings Information Technology Training for People with Disabilities Michael

Floyd,1993 The impact of information technology on the lives of disabled people has been the subject of a great deal of speculation since the early 1980s and there has been a general consensus that for disabled people to share in the benefits that new technology may bring they would need to be provided with much better training than had previously been available to them This book focuses on the possibilities and opportunities now available in Part 1 the contributors explore the issues that need to be addressed if the impact of IT on disabled people is to be as positive as possible while Part II presents detailed case studies of particular initiatives that have been established to meet these needs
