

Comprehensive Guide to Perioperative Nursing Care

Phases of Perioperative Nursing

Perioperative nursing encompasses three distinct but interconnected phases: preoperative, intraoperative, and postoperative. Each phase focuses on different aspects of a patient's surgical journey to ensure safety, optimal outcomes, and holistic care.

- Preoperative phase involves assessment, patient education, and preparation before surgery.
- Intraoperative phase covers the actual surgical procedure, emphasizing sterile technique, patient positioning, and anesthesia management.
- Postoperative phase includes recovery, monitoring, and rehabilitation to promote healing and prevent complications.

Risk Factor Assessment

A critical component of perioperative nursing is evaluating risk factors that could influence surgical outcomes.

- History of smoking increases respiratory complications and impairs wound healing.
- Obesity elevates risks for respiratory issues, pressure injuries, and thromboembolism.
- Obstructive sleep apnea (OSA) can cause airway obstruction during sedation or anesthesia, increasing hypoxia risk.
- Other factors such as age, malnutrition, diabetes mellitus, cardiac disorders, immunosuppression, and fluid/electrolyte imbalances also heighten perioperative risks.
