

to read the lines in the file, but you need a way of knowing when the end of the file has been reached.

In Python, the read-line method returns an empty string `''` when it has attempted to read beyond the end of a file. This makes it possible to write a while loop that determines when the end of a file has been reached. Here is the general algorithm, in pseudocode:

Open the file
Use read-line to read the first line from the file
While the value returned from read-line is not an empty string:
    Process the data that was just read from the file
    Use read-line to read the next line from the file
Close the file

NOTE: In this algorithm we call the read-line method just before entering the while loop. The purpose of this method call is to get the first line in the file, so it can be tested by the loop. This initial read operation is called a priming read.

Program 4-7 demonstrates how this can be done in code. The program reads and displays all of the values in the values.txt file.

Program 4-7 read_values.py

1 # This program reads all of the values in
2 # the values.txt file.
4 def main():
5     # Open the values.txt file for reading.
6     values_file = open('values.txt', 'r')
8     # Read the first line from the file, but 9     # don't convert it to a number yet. We will
10    # need to test for an empty string.
11    line = values_file.readline()
12
13    # As long as an empty string is not returned,
14    # then read-line, continue processing.
15    while line != '':
16        # Convert line to a float.
17        amount = float(line)
18
19        # Format and display the amount.
20        print('Format amount: {:.2f}'.format(amount))
21
22    # Read the next line.
23    line = values_file.readline()
24
25    # Close the file.
26    values_file.close()
27
28 # Call the main function.
29 main()

Program Output

1000.00
2000.00
3000.00
4000.00
5000.00

Using Python's for Loop to Read Lines

In the previous example you saw how the read-line method returns an empty string when the end of the file has been reached. Many programming languages provide a similar technique for detecting the end of a file. If you plan to learn programming languages other than Python, it is important for you to know how to construct this type of loop.
