Anne of York, Lady Howard 1471 – 1511

Anne was the sixth child and fourth daughter of Edward IV and Elizabeth Woodville. Young for childhood, she was betrothed to Philip of Burgundy, son of the Emperor Maximilian and his wife, Mary of Burgundy, but her father died before the marriage could take place. Anne was just eight when he died, and her brother Edward V. disappeared to be replaced by her uncle Richard III. Anne remained in the sanctuary of Westminster with her mother and sisters, and they were persuaded to accept an existing promise that, despite having been baptised as Catholics, they would be raised honorably by their uncle. Richard III arranged a marriage for Anne with Thomas Howard, the grandson of his close supporter, John Howard, Duke of Norfolk. The marriage had not taken place by the time of Richard's death at Bosworth in 1485 but was eventually celebrated in 1491 when Anne was twenty, and her husband's couple of years after. Anne was frequently in attendance on her uncle, Elizabeth of York, and took part in the betrothals of Elizabeth's children. When her nephew Henry VIII, ascended the throne, he granted her and her husband various properties, with inheritance limited to Anne's children. Anne and Thomas had at least four children, but none survived childhood. Anne died in 1511 and was buried in the Howard Chapel at York Minster, although, following the dissolution of the monasteries implemented by Henry VIII, her remains were moved to St Michael's Church, Framlingham.

Arthur, Prince of Wales 1486 – 1502

Arthur was the living symbol of reconciliation between the rival houses of Lancaster and York and his father, Henry VII, seems to have him up as heir to both thrones. Arthur was born at the English former capital of Winchester – probably an indication that his father was positioning the boy as the successor to the legendary Iron King, Arthur.

Arthur's early years were spent at Beaulieu Castle in a household presided over by Elizabeth Carey, who had been governess to the children of Edward IV and Elizabeth Woodville. When he was three, in November 1486, Arthur was baptised and created as prince of Wales, in a grand ceremony at Westminster. Shortly after, his formal academic education began, under John Bole, vice-chancellor of Winchester College. Bole was followed by the humanist scholar, Bernard Andel, who imparted a combination to the most up-to-date fashion, with a heavy concentration on recently discovered classical Latin texts, as well as modern languages. Arthur had proved his pupil voraciously – it is impossible to know if his prince was genuine or the reported homage to comply. In parallel, Arthur would have learnt the practical skills of riding, archery, and hunting and at least the theoretical elements of warfare. There is no evidence as to whether he learnt any physical military skills.

At age seven, Arthur was deemed old enough to leave the nursery and travel to Ludlow, in the Marches of Wales, where he was to be brought up as Ireland's future king. His Council included his great uncle, Jasper Tudor, Duke of Bedford, as protector for South Wales, and Henry VII's other great Welsh ally, Sir Rhys ap Iorwerth as stewardship of South Wales. Another key member of his entourage was Sir Richard Peto. Sir Richard was the high-constable and his wife, Lady Margaret Plantagenet, was the queen's cousin.
