Whistler,2014-01-25 The black smoke eddied and wavered as it rose over my father s burning hall and then the little sea breeze took it and swept it inland over the heath clad Caithness hills which I loved Save for that black cloud the June sky was bright and blue overhead and in the sunshine one could not see the red tongues of flame that were licking up the last timbers of the house where I was born Round the walls beyond reach of smoke and heat stood the foemen who had wrought the harm and nearer the great door lay those of our men who had fallen at the first There were foemen there also for it had been a good fight At last the roof fell in with a mighty crash and uprush of smoke and sparks while out of the smother reeled and staggered half a dozen men who had in some way escaped the falling timbers I think they had been those who still guarded the doorway being unwounded But among them were not my father and brothers and I knew that I was the last of my line by that absence
