Georgia's Past and Present

The Creek and Cherokee were Native American tribes. The Creek and Cherokee had a lot in common. They were almost exactly the same. They had the same way of life. There were few differences between the Creek and Cherokee Tribes. The Cherokee and Creek both lived in Georgia. However, they lived in different areas.

People change over time. There are many reasons why people change. People change what they eat, how they dress, and where they live. The Creek and Cherokee were forced to move by settlers. They had less and less land available. They would eventually move from wattle and daub houses into log cabins. A wattle and daub house is made from sticks (wattle). Then it is coated with mud or clay (daub). The Cherokee were forced out of Georgia in the 1830s. Most were forced to Oklahoma on The Trail of Tears. Many Cherokee are still there today.

People that live in Georgia today live differently than the Creek and Cherokee tribes did in the past. The Creek and Cherokee made their own clothing. Now, we buy our clothes. Another difference is food. The Native Americans fished, hunted, and farmed. People now go to the grocery store. The Native Americans built their houses. People now buy houses.
