

understanding Depression

What Is Depression?

Depression is a serious medical condition that affects thoughts, moods, feelings, behavior, and physical health. There are different types of depression, the most common is Major Depressive Disorder. Major Depressive Disorder and other types of serious depression are "long-lasting" and get in the way of a person's ability to work, study, sleep, and eat.

Signs and Symptoms of Major Depression

A person may have depression if five or more of the following symptoms are present for more than two weeks at any one time; this should be reported to a healthcare provider.

- Loss of interest or enjoyment in normal daily activities
- Persistent sad, anxious, or hopeless mood
- Irritability or nervousness
- Feelings of guilt, fear, or worthlessness
- Significant weight loss or gain due to appetite change
- Over-tiredness and/or decreased energy
- Unable to sleep or too much sleep
- Unexplained crying spells
- Difficulty concentrating, remembering, and/or making decisions
- Little or no interest in companionship or sex
- Thoughts of death or suicide

If thoughts of suicide exist, or if symptoms get in the way of daily activities, one should seek treatment right away.

Who is at Risk for Depression?

Depression can affect anyone, but there are certain risk factors that increase the chance of developing depression. Some of these factors include:

- Genetics: A family history of depression increases the risk of developing depression.
- Personality: People who are pessimistic, have low self-esteem, or are overly sensitive to negative events are at a higher risk of developing depression.
- Physical Illness: Chronic medical conditions, such as heart disease, diabetes, and chronic pain, can increase the risk of depression.
- Medication: Some medications, such as corticosteroids and certain blood pressure medications, can increase the risk of depression.

Other Types of Depression

Dysthymic Disorder (Dysthymia)

Dysthymia is a chronic, more mild form of depression. It is characterized by a long-term, low-grade depression that lasts for at least two years. Symptoms are similar to those of major depression, but less severe.

Bipolar Disorder (Manic-Depressive Illness)

Bipolar disorder is characterized by recurring cycles of intense mania and depression. Mania is a state of extreme mood, energy, and activity, while depression is a state of extreme sadness and inactivity. People with bipolar disorder may also experience periods of normal mood.

Suicide

People who are depressed are at higher risk for suicide. If a person has thoughts of suicide, it is important to seek help immediately.

- Warning Signs: Thoughts of suicide, suicidal ideation, or suicidal behavior.
- Risk Factors: History of suicide, family history of suicide, access to lethal agents, and lack of social support.
- Prevention: Seek professional help, avoid alcohol and drugs, and maintain a healthy lifestyle.
- Support: Reach out to friends and family, and seek professional help.

Areas of the Brain Affected by Depression

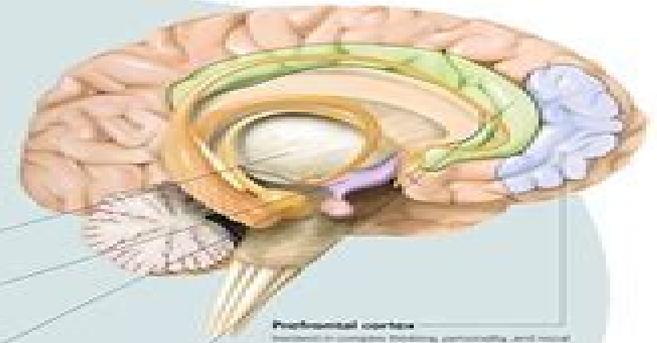

Some areas of the brain are vulnerable to depression, which causes changes in their activity. Here are the key areas of the brain affected by depression:

Hypothalamus: Controls a person's degree of arousal and awareness, including sleep and hunger. It is involved in the amygdala. The hypothalamus is highly active in people with depression.

Hypothalamus: Controls the neuroendocrine system, which is involved in mood and emotional responses. Depression causes changes in the hypothalamus, which regulate mood and appetite. This can lead to weight gain or loss.

Amygdala: Responsible for negative feelings, it is highly active in people with depression.

Anterior cingulate cortex: Helps monitor events and reacts with pleasure. It is also involved in pain. This area is highly active in people with depression.

The Limbic System

The limbic system, which includes the hypothalamus and amygdala, is a key player in the brain's emotional and motivational responses. It is highly active in people with depression.

The Role of Neurotransmitters

Neurotransmitters are chemical messengers that carry signals between nerve cells. They play a key role in mood regulation. In depression, there is an imbalance in the levels of certain neurotransmitters in the brain.

Normal neurotransmitter release and receptor binding.

Imbalanced neurotransmitter levels can lead to depression.

Treatment

Depression can often be treated with medication, therapy, or a combination of the two. Treatment should be tailored to the individual's needs.

Antidepressants

Antidepressants are medications that help regulate neurotransmitter levels in the brain. They can take several weeks to become effective.

Counseling (Psychotherapy)

Counseling is a form of therapy that helps people understand their thoughts and feelings. It can be done individually or in a group.

Mood Stabilizers

Mood stabilizers are medications that help regulate mood. They are often used in the treatment of bipolar disorder.

Alternative Therapies

Alternative therapies, such as yoga and meditation, can help reduce stress and improve mood. They should be used in conjunction with traditional treatment.
