Clinical islet transplantation

Edmonton protocol

Stem Cell Replacement of Islet Cells

Gene therapy

Sutherland et al. performed the world's first human islet transplantation, but islet transplantation is still in the experimental stage and has yielded only limited results

The use of glucocorticoid-free immunosuppression led to the development of the Edmonton protocol, and the results of a clinical islet transplantation trial (NCT00014911) using the Edmonton protocol showed significant progress.

Exploring in vitro differentiation of stem cells into pancreatic beta-cell protocols, a clinical trial of a stem cell-derived pancreatic endodermal cell population (PEC01) developed by ViaCyte, Inc. was conducted (NCT02239354)

The development of gene editing technology (CRISPR/Cas9) has made porcine pancreatic islet xenotransplantation possible and ushered in the era of personalized medicine.
