Coagulation Kinetics And Structure Formation:

Coagulation Kinetics and Structure Formation Hans Sonntag, Klaus Strenge, 1987 Coagulation Kinetics and Structure Formation H. Sonntag, K. Strenge, 2013-11-11 Colloidal dispersions play a very important role in nature industry and daily life. Sometimes long term stability is observed or desired as in ferrofluids composed of very small magnetic particles with radii of 10 nm which must be stable even in external fields. On the other hand only short term stable dispersions may be necessary during actual processing operations for example dispersions of magnetite particles during tape manufacture. The stability of dispersions and many of their physical properties are related to the interaction between the particles in the dispersion medium which may contain surfactants or macromolecular species. If the net interparticle interaction forces are attractive then aggregation may occur. Two general types of aggregation behavior may be distinguished: coagulation and flocculation. These two terms are frequently used synonymously but IUPAC has recommended the following definitions: Coagulation implies formation of compact aggregates leading to the macroscopic separation. Flocculation implies the formation of a loose or open network floc which may or may not separate macroscopically. Flocculation brought about by the simultaneous coadsorption of polymer molecules on two or more particles is referred to as bridging flocculation. If coagulation results in the merging of two particles into one as may occur with liquid droplets in emulsions this process is referred to as coalescence.

Hoffmann, Hallvard Odegaard, 1996-09-16 This seventh symposium in the series of biennial Gothenburg Symposia taking place in Edinburgh 1996 continues to bring together research scientists, designing and operating engineers and funding and supervising administrators. It also has enlarged the scope of its platform by bringing together concerned specialists from Western countries and Central and Eastern Europe and furthermore attempts to bridge the gap between developing and industrialized countries. The traditionally presented topics such as treatment of potable water and wastewater predominantly by chemical means are of utmost importance for those that need immediate action at reasonable costs. It is particularly noteworthy that an increasing number of contributions address these problems of the emerging need for environmental protection. And more and more presentations are delivered by experts from Central and Eastern Europe and from developing countries. Again the proceedings of this seventh symposium indicate and demonstrate new developments that advance the field of water and wastewater treatment Besides the ever present topics there is now a whole section on automation and control a highly significant topic for water technology that so far has not received too much attention in symposia of this kind addressing theoreticians and practitioners at the same time
