Barracks Bivouacs and Battles (Classic Reprint) Archibald Forbes, 2019-02-11 Excerpt from Barracks Bivouacs and Battles: Next morning Mick formed up to the adjutant and asked permission to see the colonel. The adjutant, after the manner of his kind, tried to extract from him for what purpose the request was made, but Mick was old soldier enough to know how far an adjutant's ill word carries, and resolutely declined to divulge his intent. After the commanding officer had disposed of what are called at the police courts the charges of the night, Mick was marched into the presence by the regimental sergeant major, and as he stood there at rigid attention, the nature of his business was demanded in the curt, hard tone which the colonel, with a proper sense of the fitness of things, uses when addressing the private soldier.
