Coalfields Regeneration:

Coalfields Regeneration Katy Bennett, Huw Beynon, Ray Hudson, 2000 Coalfields regeneration tells a story of social change and the attempts made by communities to reconstruct their lives in the context of destructive economic and competitive processes While the report focuses on British coalfields which have been particularly affected by these changes it has a broader provenance There are lessons to be learned for regeneration strategies in other areas urban and rural that have experienced such changes especially when they too were formerly mono industrial places dependent on a single economic activity for their economic well being The former coalfields of Britain are among the poorest places in Europe and are beset with problems of high unemployment poverty social exclusion disaffection and petty crime The problems of these places are exacerbated by their former reliance on one industry which has all but disappeared and by the absence of small and medium sized enterprises and long term foreign direct investment to provide replacement employment and a social focus for the communities that live there Based on in depth and personal studies of communities in two coalfields the report situates the socioeconomic changes in these places within a context of general coalfield decline in Britain assesses current regeneration strategies and organisations looks at best practice for community development discusses policy implications Coalfields regeneration argues that the extent to which local initiatives can begin to regenerate positive change will ultimately depend on policies made elsewhere and that existing top down approaches have not led to successful regeneration of the coalfields It concludes that the persistent problems characteristic of former coalfield areas would be better tackled by regeneration initiatives that focus on the needs of communities rather than on national policy directives Coalfields regeneration is invaluable reading for all those involved in community development and regeneration policy making and anyone interested in area regeneration strategies and socially excluded communities

Developing Coalfields

Communities David Waddington, 2003-12-03 In 1998 following a sobering report by the Coalfields Task Force New Labour unveiled a 350 million package of measures to remedy coalfield deprivation and social exclusion This book examines the impact of this investment in Warsop Vale a village which has starkly emphasised the negative consequences of coalfield decline Regenerating the English Coalfields Great Britain. National Audit Office, 2009 Whitehall initiatives to revive former coalfield communities have helped to make them more attractive places to live and work but many remain among the most deprived areas in England and opportunities to help train local people and promote local businesses have been missed The regeneration effort has three strands the National Coalfields Programme to decontaminate and find uses for former coalfield sites the Coalfield Regeneration Trust to provide grants to community projects and the Enterprise fund to support businesses The cost for these three schemes is 630 million to date and spending is set to reach almost 1.1 billion The Programme expects to have treated 90 per cent of land by its target completion date of 2012 and it will take twice the ten year timescale of the original Programme to achieve its aims for housing and employment space While the Trust has exceeded most of its targets because of strict funding cycles for departments it can currently offer support only up to 2011 and so the future of many projects is at risk The Department took five years to put the Enterprise Fund in place because of delays in meeting state aid requirements and protracted and unsuccessful negotiations with a private bank The NAO also found there is no overall strategy to coordinate the three initiatives and each reports and accounts for its work in isolation A forum established in 2007 to co ordinate efforts across Whitehall has met only six times is poorly attended and has no substantive actions to date At the local level the NAO found the Trust and the Fund could work more closely with the National Coalfields Programme to help train people to benefit from jobs created by the regeneration and to promote local business moving onto employment space developed on the sites In addition the Homes and Communities Agency and some Regional Development Agencies each claim all the credit for jobs created on coalfield sites resulting in over reporting of the benefits

Regenerating the English coalfields Great Britain: Parliament: House of Commons: Committee of Public Accounts,2010-03-10 Reviving the former English coalfields is one of the largest regeneration challenges over the last 30 years Between 1981 and 2004 over 190 000 people lost their jobs in coal mining The speed and extent of pit closures resulted in severe economic social and environmental deprivation in many communities In response the Department for Communities and Local Government developed three specific initiatives to regenerate coalfield areas involving almost 1 1 billion pounds of public money As at July 2009 the three initiatives had spent 630 million pounds and had brought 54 former coalfield sites back into working use and enabled private development of 2 700 houses and 1 1 million square metres of employment space Thirteen years after the start of the initiatives the Department still lacks a clear vision and has no overarching strategy for the regeneration of these areas has not sufficiently coordinated the three strands of the regeneration and has failed to coordinate wider Government activity In consequence training and support to help former coalfield communities find employment has rarely been linked to job opportunities created on coalfield sites The Committee is concerned about the value for money of these initiatives The Department does not know what improvement has made to the lives of people in the coalfield areas It does not have a robust assessment to prove to the true number of additional jobs created nor the business occupancy rates for employment space on the redeveloped sites or the number of people from former coalfield communities who have benefited Although progress has been made regeneration has cost the taxpayer much more than originally expected and taken longer than planned The Department needs to develop more sophisticated benchmarks that take into account the different levels of contamination on a site and allow separate evaluation of the incremental costs to develop housing and employment space
