C. Cowan, Richard C. Dowell, 1997 Cochlear implantation in children is a rapidly expanding area and recent clinical advances and research studies in the field have confirmed the extent of its benefits for children This timely book brings together contributions from a group of experts who work with cochlear implantations at the Melbourne Clinic in Australia which has been at the forefront of recent advances in instrumentation and clinical management of infants and children with cochlear implants TEXTBOOK Made to Hear Laura Mauldin, 2016-02-29 A mother whose child has had a cochlear implant tells Laura Mauldin why enrollment in the sign language program at her daughter s school is plummeting The majority of parents want their kids to talk Some parents however feel very differently because curing deafness with cochlear implants is uncertain difficult and freighted with judgment about what is normal acceptable and right Made to Hear sensitively and thoroughly considers the structure and culture of the systems we have built to make deaf children hear Based on accounts of and interviews with families who adopt the cochlear implant for their deaf children this book describes the experiences of mothers as they navigate the health care system their interactions with the professionals who work with them and the influence of neuroscience on the process Though Mauldin explains the politics surrounding the issue her focus is not on the controversy of whether to have a cochlear implant but on the long term multiyear undertaking of implantation Her study provides a nuanced view of a social context in which science technology and medicine are trusted to vanquish disability and in which mothers are expected to use these tools Made to Hear reveals that implantation has the central goal of controlling the development of the deaf child's brain by boosting synapses for spoken language and inhibiting those for sign language placing the politics of neuroscience front and center Examining the consequences of cochlear implant technology for professionals and parents of deaf children Made to Hear shows how certain neuroscientific claims about neuroplasticity deafness and language are deployed to encourage compliance with medical technology

Raising Kids with Cochlear Implants Amy Milani Ph. D.,2014-02 In her book Raising Kids with Cochlear Implants Amy Milani shares personal narratives about her experience raising a son and daughter with cochlear implants Excerpts from a journal she wrote following her son's surgery describe exactly how he began listening and learning language with a cochlear implant Stories pulled from daily life as expatriates in Germany reveal how her son acquires a selection of favorite words When her daughter is also born with hearing loss the family moves back to the U S to find an appropriate preschool and support system for cochlear implants and to fully embrace oral deaf education In alternate chapters Amy discusses broader issues affecting family life such as the challenges a young child faces wearing equipment and the social implications of hearing in a way that's unfamiliar to most people Her narratives provide authentic evidence of the joys and struggles parents experience when helping children with cochlear implants transition into the hearing world Speaking from thirteen years of experience Amy addresses the commitment required by parents to help their children learn to listen and speak with cochlear implants Her personal narratives are of a family ready to take on the responsibility for their children's hearing well beyond surgery She explains how her son and daughter are part of a new generation of kids identified early with hearing loss who grow up with cochlear implants relying on parents to make it all happen She calls these children Generation CI In this book she motivates new parents to get answers about their child's hearing loss and hopes to reach those who are interested in learning more about what life is like for families with young children who have cochlear implants
