How To Tell a Prefab

A prefab is a rectangular area completely enclosed in plywood, glass and insulation. It differs from a goldfish bowl in this important respect—it can be entered from one side in an upright position.

There is a small door at the rear of each prefab for mail, newspapers, and small animals. For some reason, this misplaced square porthole is located just barely out of reach of practically all of your outside activities. This condition has encouraged the average housewife to learn to slip or squeeze through the opening on a moment's notice. It's not really good exercise, but has an insidious propensity to get you in shape faster than any other form of physical endeavor.

Of course, you may not want to get yourself into that shape, but that's entirely up to you. At any rate, life in a prefab offers many unusual opportunities for personal development.
