Slota,ARMY ARMAMENT RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT COMMAND DOVER NJ LARGE CALIBER WEAPON SYSTEMS LAB.,1978 A new method for inexpensively evaluating the durability of a large number of adhesives was developed and evaluated This test method enables an investigator to simultaneously evaluate many adhesive adherend variations and to estimate the durability of the variations under conditions of load temperature and humidity The method will save time and money in the screening process used to select the best adhesives and adherend surface treatments for a particular application The method involves determining the residual strength after the bonded joints are immersed in 60 C water for prescribed periods of time Data are presented for twelve structural adhesives which are 121 C 250 F curing systems The adherends used were 2024T3 aluminum either acid dichromate FPL etched or anodized 6 Al 4V titanium and commercially pure CP titanium both phosphate fluoride etched Author Durability of Structural Adhesive Joints Allan Robert Hutchinson,1986 Adhesives ,1997 and international team of contributors Advances in structural adhesive bonding is a standard reference for structural and chemical engineers in industry and the academic sector Reviews advances in the most commonly used groups of structural adhesives including epoxy silicone and acrylic adhesives Examines key issues in adhesive selection featuring substrate compatibility and manufacturing demands Documents advances in bonding metals plastics and composites recognising problems and limitations

Environmental Durability Testing of Structural Adhesives. Part III. Reliabond 500/Reliabond 398 D. Robert Askins, DAYTON UNIV OH RESEARCH INST., 1979 A program has been conducted to investigate the durability of a 350 F 121 C curing modified epoxy structural adhesive in an elevated temperature high humidity environment while under stress Durability was assessed with three different types of environmental exposure Unstressed lap shear specimens were exposed to both a 140 F 60 C 95 100% R H environment and a 140 F 60 C water soak and residual strength tests were conducted after various aging intervals Stressed lap shear specimens were exposed to a 140 F 60 C 95 100% R H environment and time to failure recorded The unstressed agings produced a progressive loss of residual strength and a progressive increase in the amount of adhesive interfacial failure with increased aging time The stressed agings produced times to failure at least as long as those previously obtained AFML TR 78 35 Part I for the PL 729 3 PL 728 and AF 143 2 EC 3917 adhesive primer systems on the same substrates and surface preparations Had exposure times been extended beyond 2400 hours the R398 R500 system may have proven more durable than the two previously tested systems Author Durability and Fatigue Performance of Structural Adhesives and Adhesive Joints Ning Su, 1992 Environmental Durability Testing of Structural Adhesives. Part II. BR- 127/FM-123 D. Robert Askins, DAYTON UNIV OH RESEARCH INST., 1978 A program has been conducted to investigate the durability of a 250 F 121 C curing modified epoxy structural adhesive in an elevated temperature high humidity environment while under stress The results indicated that for shear stress levels low enough to preclude fracture of the adherend surface oxide layer below 2000 psi 13 9 MPa the FM 123 2 BR 127 adhesive primer system provides long term durability at 120 F 49 C and 95 100% R H on both phosphoric acid anodized PAA and optimized Forest Products Laboratory OFPL etched surfaces The change in slope of the environmental stress rupture time to failure curve for the PAA specimens seems to correlate well with the stress level at which oxide fracture would be expected to occur about 3000 psi 20 65 MPa and may indicate a different degradation mechanism above this stress level than below The effect of temperature upon the durability of the adhesive joints tested in this investigation is to reduce durability with increasing temperature as was to be expected At higher aging temperatures the interface seems to be more susceptible to degradation than the adhesive while at lower temperatures the reverse is true *Structural Adhesives. a Workshop on the Durability of Structural Panels, Pensacola, Florida, October 5-7, 1982 Eddie W. Price,1984 On the Durability of Structural Adhesive Bonds in Thermal Environments Vincent Dumont,2020 Structural bonding is an assembly technique found in many industrial fields due to its various advantages including its multimaterials bonding capabilities This aspect is definitely an advantage regarding the design of high tech structures with many elements of varying sizes materials and functions The optical systems found in telescopes not only current but also future are examples of this type of application requiring both reliability over time and precise knowledge of the properties of the adhesives These optical systems are subjected to various thermomechanical loads involving various phenomena at various scales of the behaviour of the adhesive A thorough characterisation of the mechanical properties of bonded assemblies under various thermal loadings was carried out to answer these industrial and scientific issues In particular the influence of temperature on the elastic viscoelastic and viscoplastic properties was investigated through the identification of the parameters of a viscoelastic viscoplastic spectral law The critical strain energy release rates G_c in the mixed mode plane I II were also studied as a function of the temperature using an alternative method to the ISO and ASTM standards Finally a detailed study of the microstructural properties of bonded joints was carried out by means of in situ X ray microtomography highlighting various phenomena related to polymerisation and pore growth
