Dying for Gold Lee Selleck, Francis Thompson, 1997 On September 18 1992 nine men died in the labyrinthine drifts of Yellowknife's Giant gold mine after four months of a painful labor dispute Six of the dead were Giant employees three were replacement workers All were husbands fathers sons lovers friends firefighters draegermen Their deaths brought squadrons of police investigators and the eye of the national media to Yellowknife Roger Warren a longtime Giant employee was convicted on nine counts of second degree murder A multi million dollar civil suit is ongoing Those were the headlines reported in the nightly news but as Yellowknife journalists Lee Selleck and Francis Thompson note the real story of the Giant Mine tragedy was up until now untold In a meticulously researched expose that unfolds like a compelling murder mystery the two journalists peep back the complex layers of the events leading up to the unraveling of a close knit community They reveal a large and fascinating cast of players Peggy Witte the mine owner whose belligerent strikebreaking tactics were unprecedented in the Canadian mining industry an inexperienced and stubborn union whose members sometimes resorted to criminal acts a paramilitary corporate security force police who often seemed to act as agents of Giant Mine management and an absentee federal government with close ties to the mining industry They take you into the lives of miners and their families struggling to come to grips with issues that pitted relatives and friends against each other and saw homes businesses dignity and eventually lives tumble into the black abyss And in a mesmerizing recreation of the mine blast and subsequent trial of Roger Warren they raise serious and far reaching doubts about the guilt of the man convicted of killing his co workers Utterly compelling and controversial Dying for Gold is a masterful work of investigative journalism The Death of a Gold Town Charles E.
