Dynamics Of Child Development:

Understanding How Family-Level Dynamics Affect Children's Development James P. McHale, Philip A. Cowan, 1997-10-03
Recent studies of early socialization and child development have begun to contextualize early family influences more broadly than ever before Yet despite advances in family and child research over the past decade most studies continue to examine dyadic subsystems of the larger family system rather than the full family context With a few noteworthy exceptions empirical support for the utility of whole family analysis in child development research remains to be established This sourcebook draws together diverse studies of whole family dynamics to explore the potential of this paradigm for understanding individual variability in children's early social and emotional development Several chapters underscore the significance of coparental processes behaviors between adults that include and involve the child Other chapters assess patterns of cohesion emotion coordination and involvement among members of the family group Though the studies reported in this sourcebook capture family level processes in only one type of family the two parent family they provide a knowledge base from which subsequent research on other family configurations can proceed It is our hope that this sourcebook moves us one step closer to realizing the rich and nuanced perspectives inherent in the careful clinical observations and writings of family therapists who emphasize the relevance of the whole family group for our safety health security and reality This is the 74th issue of the quarterly journal New Directions for Child Development Dynamics of Child Development English, 1995-03-01 Dynamics of Child Development Horace Bidwell English, 1961 Dynamics of Child Development. Developmental Psychology:

The Developmental Context Gary Elliott, 2014-06-30 Seminar paper from the year 2013 in the subject Psychology Developmental Psychology Atlantic International University language English abstract The family system is the primary context for the child's development and undoubtedly has the greatest impact. The nature/nurture debate continues with regards to human development, but this paper focuses its attention on the child's development within its family dynamic, how the child learns to socialize within the family social system, and how social issues in the broader sense impact on the child's development. Beyond the primary context of the family, social interactions in the child's peer group and the schooling environment aid in moulding his social development. The impact of the school environment and peer group selection will be discussed in the course of this paper. In addition to the school environment, children make use of media devices and media input more than they did a decade ago, and this may also have a profound impact on the child's perceptions of themselves and the world around them, ultimately steering their development in a particular direction. The importance and influence of family relationships, peer relationships, and socialisation within these dynamics will dominate the content of this paper. Why a family dynamic? The purpose of the family unit from its inception with our early ancestors was and continues to be focused on ensuring the survival of the species The introduction of offspring enhances the need for cohesion between the parents to safeguard the survival of the child and the continuation of the species As an extension the cohesion of the family unit will guarantee the survival of the extended society Survival of the society and necessities for it to thrive include five important components these are outlined in Berk 2000 and are listed as follows Reproduction allowing for the continued numbers in the society mortality rates and kept stable with birth rates Economics the society must manufacture and supply both goods and service Social order this component ensures that order in the society is maintained by reducing the level and incidence of conflict Socialisation the children of the society need to be socialised by its older wiser members to become participating members Emotional support members of the society must function cohesively offering support to its members when crises arise As the nature of the family has changed with time the concept of extended family changes and the family unit has morphed

Dynamics of Development Dorothy Vermilya Whipple,1966 Child Development in the Early Years Orazio P. Attanasio,Raquel Bernal,Michele Giannola,Milagros Nores,2020 This paper uses the data on child development collected around the evaluation of a nursery program to estimate the details of the process of human development We model development as made of three latent factors reflecting health cognitive and socio emotional skills We observe children from age 1 to age 7 We assume that at each age these factors interact among themselves and with a variety of other inputs to determine the level of development at following ages Relative to other studies the richness of the data we use allows us to i let the dynamics be rich and flexible ii let each factors play a role in the production of any other factor iii estimate age specific functional forms iv treated parental investment as an endogenous input We find that the dynamics of the process can be richer than usually assumed which has important implications for the degree of persistence of different inputs in time Persistence also changes with age This has important implications for the targeting of investment and interventions and the identification of windows of opportunities The endogeneity of investment is also important

Parents And The Dynamics Of Child Rearing George W Holden, 2019-07-11 Research into parent child relationships is a diverse field of inquiry attracting investigators from a variety of disciplines and subdisciplines This book integrates and synthesizes the literature by focusing on issues concerning the parent The text is organized around four key questions What determines parental behavior What are the effects of parenting on children What makes some parents more effective than others Why do some parents maltreat their children George Holden adopts a dynamic rather than a static perspective on parenting This dynamic approach reflects parents capacity to modify their behavior as they respond to changes in their children and in their own lives Throughout the text historical antecedents as well as methodological and theoretical issues are highlighted Although the book is designed for advanced courses focusing on the parent child relationship it also provides a good overview for those interested in current research concerning parenting
