Black Ranching Frontiers Andrew Sluyter, 2012-10-30 DIV In this groundbreaking book Andrew Sluyter demonstrates for the first time that Africans played significant creative roles in establishing open range cattle ranching in the Americas. In so doing he provides a new way of looking at and studying the history of land, labor, property and commerce in the Atlantic world. DIV Sluyter shows that African ideas and creativity helped to establish a production system so fundamental to the environmental and social relations of the American colonies that the consequences persist to the present. He examines various methods of cattle production, compares these methods to those used in Europe and the Americas, and traces the networks of actors that linked that Atlantic world. The use of archival documents, material culture items, and ecological relationships between landscape elements make this book a methodologically and substantively original contribution to Atlantic African American and agricultural history. div

Barbuda Reconnaissance Richard Joel Russell, William G. McIntire, 1967 Barbuda, northeastern island of the Lesser Antilles, a short distance north of Antigua, is surrounded by coral reefs and shallow water that excludes landing by other than small craft. Its approaches are ordinarily considered the most dangerous in the West Indies, and many wrecks are strewn along its reefs. This low trade wind island consists wholly of Quaternary coral reef flat debris. Almost lacking in soil, it offers extremely limited agricultural possibilities and bears a vegetational cover of dry woodland, more xerophytic in appearance than might be suggested by 39 inch annual rainfall. The limestone surface bears no streams, but adequate ground water occurs at shallow depth, most of which is brackish but useful for stock irrigation or even drinking. The 1100 inhabitants are descended from slaves who live as a highly socialistic group under the administration of a Warden from the Government of Antigua, depending on remittances from abroad for most of their small income. The paper describes Recent and late Pleistocene reefal and clastic deposits, gives considerable attention to origin of beach cusps and accretion deposits with conspicuous beach ridge systems, and emphasizes similarities between deposition taking place today and during a 20 foot high stand of late Pleistocene seas.
