

IN CONGRESS, July 4, 1776.

States of America

Unanimous Declaration of the Thirteen united States of America

When in the course of human events it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bands which have connected them with another, and to assume among the powers of the earth a separate and equal station, it is their right, it is their duty, it is their obligation to them selves, to their Neighbors, and to the King of Kings to declare the causes which impel them to the separation.

We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness. — That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed, — That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such Principles and organizing its Powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Security. But whenever any Form of Government is found to be destructive of these ends, it is the Duty of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such Principles and organizing its Powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Security. Prudence, indeed, will dictate that Governments long established should not be changed for light and transient causes; and accordingly all experience hath shewn, that even the most arduous struggle for Liberty never obtained, unless the Minds of the People be first enlightened. — We have felt the necessity of this Declaration, and we have a firm and unalterable confidence, that the sense of the People will soon be so enlightened, that they will be able to establish a Constitution for themselves, which will secure to them the full enjoyment of their Rights, and the preservation of their Liberty.
