The Family Resource Support Guide

Sarah Sexton, M.Ed.

The Family Resource and Support Guide is a set of tools that systematically supports the provision of resource-based intervention practices. The guide focuses on the identification and mobilization of formal and informal resources and supports that help individuals and families achieve desired outcomes. This guide represents a departure from more traditional helpgiving practices in which practitioners identify family needs and prescribe the resources that will be accessed to remediate a deficit. The Family Resource Support Guide promotes increasing the individual's or family's capacity to meet his/her/their own needs by engaging him/her/them in taking the lead role in identifying, mobilizing, and evaluating resources.

INTRODUCTION

Assisting families in meeting their needs is an important part of early intervention and family support. When families experience stress due to a lack of time, energy, and resources to meet their basic needs, they are less able to focus on supporting their children's learning and development (Dunst, Trivette, & Mott, 1994). In order to maximize the impact on child learning, practitioners working with families experiencing multiple stressors benefit from using evidence-based practices to provide support and assistance in ways that build the family's capacity to better meet their goals and priorities in the present and future.

The Family Resource Support Guide is a three-part instrument intended to be used by service coordinators, early interventionists, family support workers, and other individuals working with families (i.e., practitioners). The purpose of the guide is to assist families in: (1) identifying their needs and priorities, determining the formal and informal resources and supports they need to address priorities, (2) developing a plan for mobilizing and utilizing selected resources and supports, and (3) evaluating the effectiveness of the resources and supports accessed. This systematic process is designed to promote the use of capacity-building practices leading to increased and sustainable parent confidence and competence when implemented consistently.

The Family Resource Support Guide contains three distinct sections that build on one another. The first section, the Family Resource Scale (Dunst & Leet, 1987) is an objective, validated measure for assessing the adequacy of both family resources and needs or priorities in households with young children. Practitioners use the
