Excerpt from Beekeeping for the Beginner in California California is less noted for honey production than for the production of bees and queens for sale to Canadians and to other western bee keepers living under severe winter conditions The 1928 sales were 70 tons of bees and queens Comparatively few persons are likely to become successful commercial beekeepers as few possess the necessary temperament the frugality insight and skill required A prospective commercial bee keeper should go very slowly until he has had considerable actual experience The majority of farmers and many residents of small towns can however successfully keep a few stands of bees with little expense and time Beekeeping in Relation to the Orchardist Perhaps the most important but not the best known work of the honeybee is the conveyance of pollen from ower to ower thus assisting in the fertilization of plants and assuring their fruitfulness Bees are so necessary for the successful pollination of many fruit trees nut trees and seed plants that the growing of certain horticultural products has been handicapped by the recent decline in beekeeping Among numerous reasons for the growing difficulty of successful bee culture may be mentioned as chief the wide dissemination of organisms causing death to the bee larvae and thus increasing expenses and secondly the replacement of vast areas of native nectar yielding plants by the expansion of cultivation In spite of the increased difficulties however the keeping of a few colonies of bees is still possible for many It must be emphasized that bees will not work free and pay their own board as many uninformed enthusiasts suppose Bees require consistent effort to keep them in good con dition if they are not to become a Complete nuisance and a focus of infection to other bees nearby For the good of the industry the smaller beekeepers should become familiar with bees their habits and their diseases Bees are conservationists They supplement their extremely im portant service of pollinizing food and forage crops by elaborating from the nectar of the plants thus benefited one of the most delicious nutritious and readily digestible foods Hive bees in addition to gathering nectar must collect and store pollen in order to live and to rear their young The body of the bee is provided with various modified parts for gathering carrying and manipulating the pollen The relationship between bees and plants Is here marvelously close for bees cannot live without the plant blossom products About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www
