Halsey Stevens, 1953 Chronological list of works pages 321-341 Bela Bartok László Somfai, 2023-12-22 This long awaited authoritative account of Bartok's compositional processes stresses the composer's position as one of the masters of Western music history and avoids a purely theoretical approach or one that emphasizes him as an enthusiast for Hungarian folk music For Bela Bartok composition often began with improvisation at the piano László Somfai maintains that Bartok composed without preconceived musical theories and refused to teach composition precisely for this reason He was not an analytical composer but a musical creator for whom intuition played a central role These conclusions are the result of Somfai's three decades of work with Bartok's oeuvre of careful analysis of some 3,600 pages of sketches, drafts and autograph manuscripts and of the study of documents reflecting the development of Bartok's compositions Included as well are corrections preserved only on recordings of Bartok's performances of his own works Somfai also provides the first comprehensive catalog of every known work of Bartok published and unpublished and of all extant draft sketch and preparatory material His book will be basic to all future scholarly work on Bartok and will assist performers in clarifying the problems of Bartok notation Moreover it will be a model for future work on other major composers This long awaited authoritative account of Bartok's compositional processes stresses the composer's position as one of the masters of Western music history and avoids a purely theoretical approach or one that emphasizes him as an enthusiast for Hungarian Béla Bartók Boosey & Hawkes Inc, 1945 Béla Bartók Ernő Lendvai, 1971 Tonal principles Form principles Fibonacci series Use of chords and intervals Diatonic system The Music of Bela Bartok Elliott Antokoletz, 1984 The basic principles of progression and the means by which tonality is established in Bartok's music remain problematical to many theorists Elliott Antokoletz here demonstrates that the remarkable continuity of style in Bartok's evolution is founded upon an all encompassing system of pitch relations in which one can draw together the diverse pitch formations in his music under one unified set of principles Béla Bartók Tempo (London), 1950 Bela Bartok Emil Haraszti, 1938 Bela Bartok, 1939 Typed signed note envelope Hungary America Bela Viktor János Bartok March 25 1881 September 26 1945 was a Hungarian composer and pianist He is considered one of the most important composers of the 20th century and is regarded along with Liszt as Hungary's greatest composer Gillies 2001 Through his collection and analytical study of folk music he was one of the founders of ethnomusicology In 1940 as the European political situation worsened after the outbreak of World War II Bartok was increasingly tempted to flee Hungary He was strongly opposed to the Nazis and Hungary's siding with Germany After the Nazis came to power in the early 1930s Bartok refused to give concerts in Germany and broke with his publisher there His anti fascist political views caused him a great deal of trouble with the establishment in Hungary Having first sent his manuscripts out of the country Bartok reluctantly emigrated to the U S with Ditta Páztory in July that year They settled in New York City After joining them in 1942 his younger son Peter Bartok enlisted in the United States Navy where he served in the Pacific during the remainder of the war and later settled in Florida where he became a recording and sound engineer His oldest son Bela Bartok Jr remained in Hungary where he survived the war and later worked as a railroad official until his retirement in the early 1980s Bartók never became fully at home in the US. He initially found it difficult to compose. Although well known in America as a pianist, ethnomusicologist and teacher, he was not well known as a composer. There was little American interest in his music during his final years. He and his wife Ditta gave concerts. Bartók, who had made some recordings in Hungary, also recorded for Columbia Records after he came to the US. Many of these recordings, some with Bartók's own spoken introductions, were later issued on LP and CD. Bartók 1994 1995a 1995b 2003 2007 2008. Supported by a research fellowship from Columbia University for several years, Bartók and Ditta worked on a large collection of Serbian and Croatian folk songs in Columbia's libraries. They also translated some old Hungarian textbooks into English, which were also from Columbia's libraries. Citation needed. Bartók's economic difficulties during his first years in America were mitigated by publication royalties, teaching, and performance tours. While his finances were always precarious, he did not live and die in poverty, as was the common myth. He had enough supporters to ensure that there was sufficient money and work available for him to live on. Bartók was a proud man and did not easily accept charity. Despite being short on cash at times, he often refused money that his friends offered him out of their own pockets. Although he was not a member of the ASCAP, the society paid for any medical care he needed during his last two years. Bartók reluctantly accepted this. Chalmers 1995: 196-203. The first symptoms of his health problems began late in 1940 when his right shoulder began to show signs of stiffening. In 1942, symptoms increased and he started having bouts of fever, but no underlying disease was diagnosed in spite of medical examinations. Finally in April 1944, leukemia was diagnosed, but by this time little could be done. Chalmers 1995: 202-207. As his body slowly failed, Bartók found more creative energy and he produced a final set of masterpieces, partly thanks to the violinist Joseph Szigeti and the conductor Fritz Reiner. Reiner had been Bartók's friend and champion since his days as Bartók's student at the Royal Academy. Bartók's last work might well have been the String Quartet No. 6, but for Serge Koussevitzky's commission for the Concerto for Orchestra. Koussevitzky's Boston Symphony Orchestra premiered the work in December 1944 to highly positive reviews. Concerto for Orchestra quickly became Bartók's most popular work, although he did not live to see its full impact. In 1944, he was also commissioned by Yehudi Menuhin to write a Sonata for Solo Violin. In 1945, Bartók composed his Piano Concerto No. 3, a graceful and almost neo-classical work. He began work on his Viola Concerto but had not completed the scoring at his death.
