Topic: Psychology | Words: 1252 | Pages: 4

Introduction

It is no secret that family therapy is a direction that mainly considers systemic connections and interpersonal relationships between spouses. The presented videos vividly demonstrate the therapist's high-quality, competent, and correct work with the couple in the form of a conversation in order to change the models of family communication, problem-solving, and role distribution. The advantage of this session is that all family members can express their opinions and be heard openly. This paper is devoted to a complex and comprehensive analysis of two videos in which a couple and a therapist actively interact with each other to solve existing problems, old conflicts, and traumas in a safe space.

Therapeutic Relationship

In short-term psychotherapy, a specialist takes an auxiliary position, not an expert one. He does not teach the client how to live and what to do but helps to find a working solution. This approach assumes that a client is an expert in his own life, he knows better what is going on in it and what brought him to the point where he is. The therapist acts on the basis of this knowledge of the client, and not his own positions and views.

The therapist-client relationship in solution-focused therapies is one of the most essential and significant components of the psychotherapeutic process in terms of understanding the internal dynamics or supportive external environment in the videos. A sense of security and acceptance is the basis for productive and effective collaboration between the
