

Accounting Principles I

Chapter 2

Account: An individual accounting record of increasing and decreasing in a specific asset or liability or equity. An account consists of a title, debit side, and credit side.

T-Account form:

| Title of account | |
|------------------|--------------|
| Debit (Dr.) | Credit (Cr.) |

Benefits of using a T-Account – It reduces errors and helps determine totals of each side and the account balance.

Account Balance: The side of the T-Account that is greater. Ex. The account shows a debit balance if debits exceed credits.

Double Entry System: Basis of most accounting systems

Summary of Debit and Credit Rules:

| Assets | Liabilities | Owner's Capital | Owner's Drawing | Revenues | Expenses |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Debit side increase Credit side decrease | Credit side increase Debit side decrease | Credit side increase Debit side decrease | Debit side increase Credit side decrease | Credit side increase Debit side decrease | Debit side increase Credit side decrease |

Normal Balance: The increasing side of the account

Recording Process Steps: Analyze transaction, Put the transaction in the Journal, Transfer Journal information into accounts in ledger

Journal: The book of original entry

Journal contribution to recording process:

- It's one place for complete effects of a transaction
- Provides a chronological record of transactions
- Prevents and locate errors easily because debit and credits amounts can be easily compared

Journalizing: Entering transaction data in the Journal. A complete Journal entry contains the date, account titles, amounts of Debits and Credits, and a brief explanation of transaction.

Single Entry: entries that involve only two accounts: one debit and one credit.

Compound Entry: Entry that requires three or more accounts

Ledger: The entire group of accounts by a company.

Posting: Procedure of transferring Journal entries to ledger accounts
