Amsterdam To Nairobi:

Amsterdam to Nairobi Ernest W. Lefever, 1979 Churches and in a larger sense religion should serve as the conscience of society Hence Christian bodies have an obligation to condemn gross evils and to speak out on the great moral issues but they should not give their full support to any political party or cause The World Council of Churches WCC from its beginning in 1948 showed an interest in the developing countries The WCC has been increasingly influenced by the picture of downtrodden people struggling for freedom dignity and economic development By 1975 the WCC had embraced the concept and practice of liberation theology which on some issues has been very similar to Marxism Ambiguity toward Marxism stems from a profound confusion between ends and means The Marxists claim of a clear cut diagnosis and simple answers has an appeal to Westerners who feel guilty about their power and wealth Seven recommendations are offered in conclusion that would make the WCC truer to the Christian faith and make a more responsible contribution to justice and freedom in the political order Appendices that contain texts of relevant WCC documents notes and an index of persons and countries are included BZ
