

Musical Theatre Essay

Musical theatre is a form of drama where singing, dancing and acting play a vital role. Musicals come in all sorts of types, such as: book musicals, jukebox musicals, film musicals, concept musicals and pop/rock musicals. An example of a book musical would be Matilda because this show was adapted from the Roald Dahl novel. Chicago is a film musical where the story has been adapted from screen to stage, Wicked is another book musical because it is based around the book Wicked, and Hamilton is again a book musical as it is based off a biography. The three musicals I will be focusing on are Hamilton, Wicked and Chicago.

Hamilton is a sung and rapped through, hip-hop. This is because the creator, Lin Manuel Miranda, had many rap influences growing up and wanted to include that in his work because it had never been done before in a musical. In songs like 'Non-stop' that is very rap based but it also does have traditional singing moments for the chorus. Also, tensions are quite throughout the whole narrative, so they often used rap as a way of showing nervousness. For example, repeating words is representing stuttering and fast rapping represents fast paced talking. Wicked is a folk/pop musical. This is because the songs are very upbeat, and pop influenced but the storyline is based off the wizard of oz and the town it is set in is very folk like and old fashioned. This can be shown by the characters outfits which included long neutral tone dresses and aprons. Chicago is an American Jazz musical. This is because it is set in America and Fosse had a lot of vaudeville and burlesque influences growing up, so all the costumes and dances are sensual and jazz like. This includes flapper dresses, small heels and fishnet tights.

Each of these musicals have a range of themes explored within them. A theme is an idea that recurs in a form of art. Firstly, Hamilton demonstrates several themes like history, legacy, war, conflict, running out of time, honour, reputation, forgiveness and writing. For example, the theme of running out of time is explored through Alexander Hamilton's rush to write essays to challenge the government. This is shown in the song 'Non-stop' where they refer to the 51 essays Hamilton managed to write. Another theme is war as the American Revolution allowed Hamilton to rise to fame and it could also imply how he fought for everything in his life which proves how ambitious and hardworking he is. In the musical he states, "I wish there was a war, then we could prove we're worth more than anyone bargained for." as he believes war
